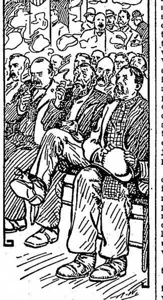
And instances like these kept the young lawyers on the qui vive for a possible like happening in their cases. But the reverse of the medal was in the incident of a very bright young lawyer of my acquaintance, who got a nomination, lost the election, took to whisky as a cure, established a "touching route," where he collected dollars, half-dollars and quarters for awhile, and then died shortly after, a victim to the "political bug" and the "whisky bug" combined, than which no more fatal and totally destructive combination was ever invented.

The most successful of the local politicians were those who had lived in one ward all their lives, who had made politics their life-game, and who could "deliver the delegates." In conventions, as the delegates made the nominations, the more delegates a man absolutely controlled the more of a power he was. The young and ambitious political worker always started out to control the delegates in his precint. Then he reached out after other precincts, and when the time came that he could control his ward he had arrived at the proud position of a "ward boss." This, however, required years of the most unremitting attention to detail, an immense amount of wire-pulling and strategy and a rigid distribution on as even terms as possible of all "patronage" which might come his way. The delegates were usually very much the same individuals from year to year. They might be shifted from one convention ticket to another, but the names of the "faithful" would be pretty sure to turn up annually, unless in case of death, and in that event someone would be selected who could be "controlled" like a tin soldier.

Politics as a profession develops shrewdness, nerve, capacity to "stand the gaff," oratory, conversational powers, personal magnetism, and, in fact, all the accomplishments of a first-class confidence man. Although, of course, all confidence men are not politicians. Needless to say, no suggestion is here made to "statesmen." These gentlemen do not mix with vulgar municipal politics, but get elected to senatorial and other offices and never get their names mixed up in any scandal save one befitting their honorable positions. Politics loosens the action of the pecuniary nerve, for no successful politician can be a "tightwad." He may think he can be economical, but he can't be. He may figure on what it is going to cost as to main outlay, but "perquisites" will eat him up quicker than nitric acid will cook an angleworm. The hardened professional politicians know this only too well, and the result implants in their bosoms a pardonable curiosity in the question of "what there is in it for them" if any political proposition is unfolded to their longing gaze.



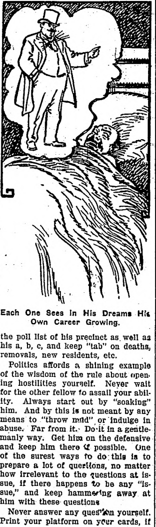
To Hear About the "Burning Issues."

Politics as a profession has evolved the "boss." He is not always the coarse creature of the cartoonist's fancy, nor the devouring lion of the muck-rake romancer. Often he dresses elegantly, and quite often he is gentle-spoken and of few words at that. He just controls the "delegates," that's all. After all the fire and fury of reform has spent its force, his candidate is nominated and generally elected, and he gets a few "contracts" which enable him to keep the wolf tribe so far from his premises that he couldn't hear one howl if it used a megaphone.

He is the man on whom the petty politicians keep their eyes glued and their ears tilted. Each one sees in his dreams his own career growing to the Aladdin like height of the "big boss." And that subtle schemer nurses their aspirations, and as someone must necessarily take the place of the mighty when the mighty are fallen, of course there is a chance for all competitors.

Now as the mere mechanism of the game requires a very great familiarity with methods as well as men, it follows that the politician is a close student of the various cogs and wheels the shafts and pulleys of political machinery. He finds, if a novice, that he cannot "butt in" and run things "right off the reel," because he does not know how. He finds that the nomination of candidates, the whole routine of political life, is governed by fixed rules and statutory laws, and that he must of necessity familiarize himself with these things else remain a mere tyro in the art.

This means that he will have to study books, read up the laws, keep posted in the changes which are continually occurring in the laws relating to elections and nominations, and in various ways "get next" to the legal aspects of politics. Then he will have to learn his ward; know its various precincts and their boundaries; know the location of the polling places, and who the people are in whose shops or stores the polling places have been placed, their politics, and everything about them. He must serve as clerk and judge of election, and learn the duties of a challenger. He must know the poll list of his precinct as well as his a, b, c, and keep "tab" on deaths, removals, new residents, etc.



Each One Sees In His Dreams His Own Career Growing.

Politics affords a shining example of the wisdom of the rule about opening hostilities yourself. Never wait for the other fellow to assail your ability. Always start out by "soaking" him. And by this is not meant by any means to "throw mud" or indulge in abuse. Far from it. Do it in a gentlemanly way. Get him on the defensive and keep him there if possible. One of the surest ways to do this is to prepare a lot of questions, no matter how irrelevant to the questions at issue, if there happens to be any "issue," and keep hammering away at him with these questions.

Never answer any question yourself. Print your platform on your cards, if you are a candidate, but don't answer any questions about it. The platform speaks for itself, don't it? A professional politician ought to be able to convince the most captious questioner that "his platform" faces every way to the four corners of the earth and was meant for the blessing of all men. When he starts on his career he must expect to go slowly, as a rule, emerging from one unimportant position to another until he has either become a power himself, or has been useful enough to some "Boss" to be placed on a ticket. Once fairly launched in a political office, and he becomes a target for the press and public criticism, and his native ability is subjected to the corrosive test of having power placed in his hands.

A good politician must always be on the alert to "catch the instant at its forward top" and direct the current of any popular movement into the proper channel. If there is a reform movement in the air he must not only champion it, but he must be in the lead of the crusaders. The public are the sheep, the politician is the bellwether.

I remember a typical instance of this kind.

A certain paving scheme was being broached, and in the district where it was proposed to introduce it, there were a great many Swedish American citizens who opposed the improvement. Nearly all of them understood the English language as well their own tongue. A grand mass meeting was called for and held amid tumultuous enthusiasm. A well-known Swedish-American was selected as chairman, and a Swede secretary duly installed. Two speeches were made in Swedish, and then a popular Irish politician made a ringing address amid great applause. He was followed by a German lawyer who was even more fiery, if anything, than his predecessor in denouncing the outrage contemplated. The lawyer was also a politician.

A call for names was started and a club formed. There were 367 Swedish-American members of the club and the Irishman and the German, 369 members in all. And at the next meeting postponed two weeks to elect officers the Irishman was elected president and the German secretary and treasurer.

SIMPLE EXTENSION LADDER.

How Part of an Old Ladder Can Be Utilized.

I made a ladder extension by sawing off seven feet from an old ladder and removing three of the rungs as shown in the cut, explains a writer in Farm and Home. Then place it on the outside of the ladder to be lengthened, bore two holes through each side piece, put a bolt in each hole and the ladder is four feet longer. After using it can be changed to original size much quicker than if tied with ropes and it's safer. The top ends of the ladder should be cut out to receive the lower rung of the extension.

Handy Extension to the Ladder.

MOVING LARGE TREES.

Man with Experience Tells How It Can Be Done.

I consider nursery grown trees the best for transplanting because their roots are more fitted for that purpose, and I apply this to the elm as well as all other trees. However, natural trees may be readily fitted for transplanting so as to even make their success a certainty, but it is only economical on large trees, say from three inches to one foot in diameter. For example, if in our judgment we find it necessary to take a ball of dirt about five feet in diameter and 18 to 24 inches in depth, along with a certain tree in transplanting, we may any time between leaf dropping in the fall and starting in the spring dig a trench around this tree about six inches smaller all around and fill in again after all the detached roots have been cut smoothly with a knife from the bottom up and the tops previously shortened as above. These smoothly cut roots soon send out a mass of rootlets, clinging tightly to the soil that we had packed into the trench again, and in the coming transplanting season between fall and spring we again dig around this tree, leaving the ball as in our first judgment, and plant it only a few inches deeper in its new place. Such trees may safely be moved during fall and winter when time is not always as valuable as in the spring, while small trees should only be planted in the spring, which is and will remain the best time for all planting.—Albert Duebendorfer.

FOR MELON GROWERS.

How You Can Tell When a Cantaloupe Is Ready to Pick.

While it is not a difficult matter to tell when a cantaloupe is ripe, yet it requires considerable skill and experience to be able to judge just the right time or stage at which the melon will ripen nicely and reach the market in good condition. The practice of allowing them to get ripe or yellow on the vines, except in very cool weather, destroys both the fine flavor and the crisp freshness of the flesh, as well as their ability to stand shipping to market. As soon as the melon begins to ripen, especially of the small fruited kinds, the stems crack slightly away from the melon, and sometimes a few small drops of bright, red juice appears in the cracks, rendering it more noticeable. As soon as this crack appears the melon should be picked and shipped to market. The melons should be picked every morning while it is yet cool, if possible, and on very hot days the patch should be gone over again in the afternoon. They should be picked much closer on a hot day than on a cool one, as the state of the weather has a direct influence on their ripening—hardly a melon being gathered on a cool day from the same number of hills that would yield a basket full on a hot one. —W. A. Hannelberger.

BOXES VS. BARRELS FOR APPLES.

Choice of the Package Depends Upon the Demands of the Market.

Some time ago when George T. Tippin, secretary of the Missouri State Horticultural society was asked which he considered preferable, boxes or barrels, for packing apples, he replied that whether boxes or barrels were used depended upon the demand of the particular market. He says:

During the past few years the box is forcing itself into new markets each year. The labor question is against the box. It takes more labor and better skilled labor than for the barrel. I am in favor of boxes. Packers cannot counterfeit the packages as they can in the barrel, and this will bring the box into favor. Would like to see the box used for the general package. The disposition of people is to buy in the original package. More is involved in the package than often thought. The fact of the latter question is a serious one, and the lumber question is a serious one, and it is hard to tell what the outcome will be. The standard box is 22 inches by 11½x11½. When properly packed it weighs a bushel. Three bushel boxes run one to three pounds more than a barrel in weight.

THE ROTTING OF APPLES.

Six Principal Kinds of Disease Which Attack the Fruit.

There are six principal kinds of rots that attack apples, and perhaps there are minor ones. These six are the bitter rot, black rot, blue mold, brown rot, pink rot and one that has no English name, but is known only by its scientific name, Alternaria.

Blue mold seems to be able to grow at a lower temperature than any of the other molds. Some apples were inoculated with the spores of all these molds and rots and placed in cold storage at just below freezing, 31 degrees. At the end of nine weeks the blue mold had spread in all the apples in which it had been pricked, while none of the other molds had developed at all.

This is interesting, as showing what we may expect from fruit kept in cold storage. Its keeping depends largely on whether or not the blue mold has obtained a foothold on the fruit.

On the other hand when the apples that had been inoculated with the other rots were taken into a living room where the temperature was at 70 degrees, a normal temperature for human beings, all the different molds and rots developed with great rapidity. In two weeks all of the fruits were half or wholly rotten.

The lesson to be drawn from this, says Farmers' Review, is that the grower of apples must know something about the different kinds of rot so that he can tell when his fruit is affected. Such affected fruit must be dealt with according to its exposure. If it has become affected with blue mold germs it must be put to some immediate use rather than be put into cold storage.

Molds and rots are produced by vegetable organisms that are like plants in that some will grow in one temperature and some in another. However, all of the molds and rots that affect apples will grow at above 45 degrees. Therefore in the ordinary cellar it is impossible to keep fruit that has been exposed to any of these rots.

The germs of the various diseases are not killed by low temperature; they are only reduced to a quiescent state. Therefore when apples that have become inoculated by the forms other than blue mold come out of the storage house they begin to develop these rots very rapidly, and the people imagine that the cold storage experience has the power of making fruit rot more quickly than it otherwise would. We have probably no good reason for believing this.

The least aggressive rot seems to be the pink rot; and apples that have been affected with pink rot before storage will frequently be fit to sell two or three weeks after the apples come out of cold storage.

PICKING HIGH FRUIT.

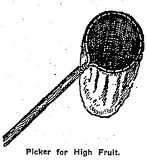
Bag Which Will Keep Fruit from Being Bruised.

Peaches, pears, apples, etc., out of reach by ordinary means can be gathered by using the device shown in the accompanying illustration, without bruises, says the Prairie Farmer.



Picker for High Fruit.

Bend a stout wire in a circle and sew to it a small bag. Attach the wire to a long pole. This will enable you to pull fruit from the top of a tree without injuring it.

HAND PICKED.

Asparagus culture has been revolutionized. Gardeners now sow the seed in rows in rich, well prepared land and cultivate it like other garden crops.

The export of fruit offers much to be hoped for in the future; as the foreign markets are often willing to pay a very high price for American fruits.

The soil of the orchard needs management just as surely as does the soil of the field in which vegetables are growing. It needs to be kept supplied with the elements of plant food.

To promote the early development of vegetables, prepare the ground a year ahead if possible and keep on preparing it till the soil is full of plant food and decaying vegetable matter.

Bugs in Melons.

The bugs that infest melons and squashes are a merciless horde. It is tedious to kill them by hand and poisoning them is very unsatisfactory. Get a lot of empty strawberry boxes, tack gauze over them and invert one over each fair-sized melon; the bugs will have to stay away then.

Sow More Radishes.

You can keep on sowing radishes until late in the season. As fast as one bed is emptied fix it up and plant more there; or, better yet, exchange the next batch of radishes with some other similar crop and there'll be more plant food for them in the new soil.

WHAT THE TRADE MARK MEANS TO THE BUYER

Few people realize the importance of the words "Trade Mark" stamped on the goods they buy. If they did it would save them many a dollar spent for worthless goods and put a lot of unscrupulous manufacturers out of the business.

When a manufacturer adopts a trade mark he assumes the entire responsibility for the merit of his product. He takes his business reputation in his hands—out in the limelight—"on the square" with the buyer of his goods, with the dealer, and with himself.

The other manufacturer—the one who holds out "inducements," offering to brand all goods purchased with each local dealer's brand—sidesteps responsibility, and when these inferior goods "come back" it's the local dealer that must pay the penalty.

A good example of the kind of protection afforded the public by a trade mark is that offered in connection with National Lead Company's advertising of pure White Lead as the best paint material.

That the Dutch Boy Painter trade mark is an absolute guaranty of purity in White Lead is proved to the most skeptical by the offer National Lead Company make to send free to any address a blow-pipe and instructions how to test the white lead for themselves. The testing outfit is being sent out from the New York office of the company, Woodbridge Building.

Too Much Afraid of Dirt.

It is quite true that "cleanliness is next to godliness," but in this day of fads and scientific frills the question is whether we are not getting altogether too afraid of a little dirt. Dirt has been defined as matter in the wrong place, and hygiene is the science of keeping it in the right place. But we are inclined to think that we are all a little bit too much up in the air on the matter of cleanliness; a little too afraid of coming in contact with the clean-smelling, kindly earth, and are in danger of becoming nasty-nice.—Washington Herald.

Baseball Technicality.

A few weeks ago some boys were playing ball in an apartment house yard. A colored waiter came out of the kitchen and in a very cross manner told them to stop right away. One boy, who had gone to get a drink came back and found the others making ready to leave; he asked, wonderingly, "What is the matter?" and another one calmly answered, "the game was called off on account of darkness.

To the Pole.

Commander Peary is on his way to the arctic, confident that this time he will reach the north pole. Whether he succeeds or not, he is without doubt the best equipped arctic explorer who has thus far appeared. He has spent more years and more thought upon the problem than any other man. He has reached a point nearer the pole than any other explorer; and if he had known as much as he now knows about the direction of the ice drift above Greenland, he would at least have come pretty near reaching his goal. This time he starts with that knowledge. He is planning to establish his base of supplies, not on the land, but on the ice, 125 miles farther north, and will travel northwest with his sledges, hoping that the eastward drift of the ice will be the same as he found it before. If this should be the case, he ought to be able to make good progress in the direction of the pole itself. He has adopted an ingenious way of carrying a house north with him for use as headquarters. It will be built of the boxes containing his supplies, explains the Youth's Companion. Each box is eight inches high and ten inches wide, and of such length as is convenient. These boxes will be piled up to form the walls of the house, with the end to be opened turned to the inside. When a package of crackers is needed, he can knock out a panel in the wall of his house—that is, open the end of a box—reach in and get all the crackers he needs, and so on with bacon, pemmican, oatmeal, sugar, tea, coffee, roast-beef hash or condensed milk.

A publication devoted to femininities asks what has become of the fair haired people we used to admire? Where are lovely blondes, the strawberry blonde and the blonde cendree, or even the red-headed girls, where are they? Look where one will, brown hair or dark hair predominates. Science tries to account for it. We are told that the time is coming when the genuine golden haired beauty will be as rare as the "copper butterfly," and that a head like a wheat sheaf will be to proclaim aloud the coiffeur's artful aid. The best of it is, exclaims the Boston Herald, the peroxide blonde has "passed away," so much so, in fact, that the very name is spoken in derision. And what means this darkening of the race? One theory is as good as another, and a favorite answer is, intermarriage; the different countries, with their distinguishing types, are blending more and more. Scandinavia and Italia, the north and the south, mingle in the west, and the degree of latitude, the temperate zone does the rest.

Nature may as well prepare to give up her secrets. Thomas A. Edison is going to quit the moneymaking game and devote the rest of his life to investigations in the realms of pure science. Now we shall know why is a hen and all those other intricate and hitherto unanswerable problems. The vermiform appendix that heretofore has laughed when questioned as to its purpose will have to sit up and give straight answers or it will be ruthlessly exposed. University professors who have been making starfish may as well throw up their hands. The electric wizard doubtless will make sunfish or moonfish at the first attempt. As for radium, probably he will show how each family can make a supply for home consumption out of a pair of old shoes. Proceed, Tom, exclaims the Chicago Daily News. May you live long enough to find out all there is to be known, and write it out for us in a neat, if rather large, book.

Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, the president of the Canadian Pacific railway, was the guest of honor at a banquet given in Toronto on June 16. In the course of his speech Sir Thomas referred to the fact that just 26 years have passed since his arrival from the United States to assist in the management of Canada's new transcontinental railway. The influence of that line on the development of Canada is beyond estimate. England has recognized the service rendered to Canada by this Milwaukee-born American railroad man, and it would be hard to say how much has been done for the United States by Sir Thomas Shaughhessy and by that other American-born railway builder, Sir William Van Horne.

William Redmond, the Irish leader in the British house of commons, recently in a genial mood and in playful allusion to the birthday honors list asked whether "as a matter of general convenience and in order that honorable members might know how to address their colleagues with becoming respect it could be arranged that honorable gentlemen who had joined the titled classes should wear rosettes for at least one month after the conferment of the title." No minister was bold enough to answer.

Information and Gossip Picked Up Here and There in Washington.

Gen. Rucker Beats Mortality Table

YOU'RE DEAD
CHECK $ TIME

WASHINGTON.—The person who reaches the age of 95 has lived long enough. He has no technical right to go on living, anyway. Of course, they usually do, just as lots of people refuse to be Oslerized at 60, but they do it at their own risk, so to speak, and in defiance of a formidable array of mortality statistics.

This was the discovery made by life insurance interests the other day when they looked up the "technical" demise of Brig. Gen. D. H. Rucker of Washington, father of Mrs. Philip H. Sheridan. The general has reached the hoary age of 96, and being still hale, was surprised by being informed by the life insurance concern which had been carrying him on its books for years and years that it was ready to pay his claim.

The action is declared a startling innovation in insurance annals. Local experts could not recall any previous case of such action, at 96 or any other age. But when they looked up their tables of logarithms and trigonometry they were convinced that the action was not only justifiable, but logical.

These tables showed conclusively that out of 100,000 individuals at the promising age of ten just three may expect to round out 95 full cycles. Those three in turn have no right at that age to expect that Father Time will dole out to them an average of more than six months apiece. More than that would be overdraft, for honoring which the guardian of the hour glass and the scythe should be held directly responsible.

According to these same mortality tables life is seen to be a thing of uncertainties. They prove unquestionably that the longer you live the older you are likely to be before you die. That is to say, while the expectation of life decreases as the age advances, it does not fall away nearly so fast as that advance.

The youngster of ten can count on living to be nearly 59, but when he has reached the manly age of 21 his chances are better. He can now count on rounding 62. At 48, rotund and jolly, his chances are the best for living out the allotted span of three score years and ten.

But that is not the end of his hopes by any means. When he gets to be 60 his expectation increases to 75, edging away just like that elusive pot of gold at the end of the rainbow. But at 75 the chances of life still give him six more years. At 80 his chances are of the best for seeing 84, but if, on the gambling chance that is his, he marches on to 90, there is still a year and a half to his account in the national bank of life.

But at 95 you come to the end of the mortality tables. The account has dwindled to six months, and if you are obstinate enough to go right on living, the statistician simply don't know what to do with you unless he pays the claim, calling you "dead," and thus keeping the tables correct.

Bridal Table of Mrs. William H. Taft

THE wife of the Republican candidate for the presidency has many valuable possessions, gifts from the mighty ones of earth, kings, emperors and princes, but her most cherished treasure is a round mahogany table, black with age and showing daily use.

This table is used by the Taft family whenever their household goods are set up and has been ever since Mrs. Taft attained the dignity of the married state. It was the table on which the wedding breakfast of William Howard Taft and Helen Herron was served some odd years ago.

Judge Herron and Mrs. Herron, parents of Mrs. Taft, were lovers of old mahogany, and they had many beautiful pieces in their Cincinnati home. After the wedding Mrs. Herron believed that the young couple would appreciate having for their dinner table the same board on which they had partaken breakfast on the bridal day. So it was sent to their modest home in Clifton, Cincinnati, and it was set for the first meal after Mr. Taft brought his bride home from the wedding journey and ever since it has been the medium of the family fare as well as its most elaborate hospitality.

Mrs. Taft took the table to the Philippines, and again it came back to Washington. Just now it is carefully swathed in soft cotton wrappings and stored in the commodious attic of the assistant secretary of war, Mr. Oliver, awaiting its resurrection. But whether its next appearance be in the White House or in the private home of William Howard Taft, it will be the dining table of the family, as Mrs. Taft expresses it, while the clan holds together.

Red Rose on Coffin of Bismarck's Friend

WITH simple funeral rites, and accompanied only by a few faithful friends of his declining years and a single representative of the German embassy, the body of Baron Alexander de Pury-Herve, an aid-de-camp to Bismarck and a member of one of the oldest houses of Germany, was laid to rest in a little cemetery here the other day. Two lilies and a single red rose reposed on the plain coffin. It was his dying request.

A friend and comrade of Bismarck, he was numbered with the pride of the German army that participated in the Franco-Prussian war. He married a princess of royal blood, but he erred once, it is said, and, rather than have the finger of scorn pointed at him by his comrades, he quit the army and came to America. That was 28 years ago. His princess wife divorced him.

In New York he married an actress with whom he fell in love. The family pride of the De Purys is great, and he was disinherited and his allowance of $300 a week cut off.

When he was disinherited he turned to journalism, working on the New York Staats Zeitung and other papers. Then his actress wife died, leaving him with three children. He moved to Winona, Minn., where he took charge of the Herald.

After a few years he married again. He came to Washington and went to work in the storeroom of the government printing office. The heavy work of lifting documents was too much for the old man and he suffered a severe strain, which made an operation necessary.

All his life the old soldier wore a rose of red, but he never told why until a few days before his death.

A battle which the iron chancellor had been witnessing had ended, the sun was setting on a field of carnage, and Bismarck, with bowed head, turned and rode away, his aids around him.

The figure of a young officer in the full pride of manhood lying white-faced on the field caught the eye of the prime minister. Without a word he dismounted, picked a red rose from a bush near by and placed it over the young officer's heart. And as he placed it there a tear fell from his eye. So, when the old baron died, unhonored, unknown, they placed a red rose on his breast, for they knew his secret at last.

Commission Getting Data on Resources

ALTHOUGH only a short time has elapsed since President Roosevelt appointed the national conservation commission, the work of taking stock of the nation's resources has been begun. It will be carried on vigorously to enable the commission to make its report to the president by January 1, 1909.

A large amount of the material on waters, lands and minerals is available in the executive department, the heads of which have offered their co-operation in the task the commission has undertaken. Other important data will be collected through special channels, including state conservation commissions now being formed and several of the national organizations represented at the White House conference.

By early fall the commission expects to have sufficient material to begin the study of the inventory of the country's resources and by the middle of October it hopes to have the greater part of this material in hand, so that the full commission, which will hold its first meeting December 1, may take up at once the study of data which the summer's work has brought together.

One week later the commission will hold a joint meeting in Washington with the governors of the states or their representatives, with the view of closer co-operation with the state commissions.

MAN ENGAGED TO FOUR IN A WEEK

EACH WAS TO BE INSTALLED AS THE MISTRESS OF A $40,000 SUBURBAN MANSION.

ADVERTISES FOR HOUSEKEEPER

Women Respond and He Shows Them Supposed Future Home, Then Proposes—Would-Be Brides Now Looking for Him.

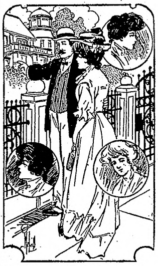
Cincinnati.—Within one week four young women of this city became engaged to a man from parts unknown who had promised to install each of them as mistress of the unoccupied Seasongood mansion on Walnut Hills, which he said he had bought.

The stranger, who gave the name of Frank Bissinger, became acquainted with the women through their answering his advertisement for a housekeeper. He lost no time in engaging their services, and showed them in relays the interior of the mansion. Bissinger, in order to win their confidence, permitted them to suggest the manner in which the house was to be furnished.

In this way he leaped into their good graces and at the psychological moment he proposed to them. He told each of the four that he did not want to install her as his housekeeper and then marry her as his employe. They saw the position in the same light and made arrangements for their trousseau.

Bissinger told the women that he had purchased the mansion for $40,000. The same story was told at John Ahlbrandt's saloon on Elm street, where he had a room. While he was engaged in winning the women Bissinger was busy with excuses to Charles E. Nourse, of the real estate firm of Cleneay & Nourse, agents for the Walnut Hills property. Innumerable times he made arrangements with the broker to close the deal by the cash payment of $1,000, but he failed to keep his engagement, usually telephoning Mr. Nourse and stating that the money had not been forwarded by his bank in San Francisco.

Then a day was set for the consummation of the transaction, and the real estate firm privately made up its mind that it would have nothing further to do with Bissinger if he failed to make good on that date. The expected happened, and all negotiations were declared off.



He Pointed Out to His Prospective Brides as His Own the Mansion of Another.

The Seasongood home was recently purchased at auction by B. F. Thomas, of the United States engineer's office, in the government building. He intended to convert it into a flat building, but changed his mind, and placed it on the market through the agents. Bissinger secured the key to the mansion as a prospective purchaser, and had it in his possession almost a week, during which time he was busy courting the four women.

Bissinger said he was one of the victims of the San Francisco earthquake, claiming to have been in Europe on a business mission when the disaster took place, which wiped out all the members of his family except the baby, now a girl of ten years. He said both of her legs had been burned off and told it in such a pathetic manner that the story gained the sympathies of his hearers. Bissinger said he was purchasing the mansion as a home for his little girl. He claimed to have opened an account here with the German National bank.

He told practically the same story to Mr. Ahlbrandt, at whose place he roomed. His baggage consisted of a suit case. Mr. Ahlbrandt's son said that Bissinger had shown a telegram, purporting to have come from an insurance company, which read that there was $6,000 to his credit at the German National bank.

Bissinger hurriedly packed his suit case last week and since then nothing has been seen or heard from him at No. 1233 Elm street.

Bissinger is described as being a polished German, of about 50 years of age, weighing 160 pounds, about 5 feet 8 inches in height, and usually wearing dark clothes. He has a mustache.

On motion duly carried the minutes of the meeting of the county board of equalization were accepted as read.

Resolution offered by Commissioner Shaw who moved its adoption duly seconded by Commission Aubol, and carried unanimously.

State of Minnesota, County of Red Lake—ss.

Upon receiving a petition of the legal voters of said Red Lake county, Minnesota, equal in number to fifteen per cent of the votes cast in said county at the last preceding general election held in said county, in accordance with the provisions of chapter 314 of the Laws of Minnesota, 1905, praying for the establishment and maintenance of a county school of agriculture and domestic economy in the village of St. Hilaire in said county, we, the board of county commissioners of said county, did proceed to fix a date for the holding of a special election to submit the question to the electors of said county and in accordance with said petition designate Tuesday, the 29th day of September, 1908, as the date for the holding of such special election.

(Seal.) C. A. LINDQUIST,
Chairman.

Attest:
JOHN B. O'BRIEN,
County Auditor.

On motion of Commissioner Shaw seconded by Commissioner Aubol the above resolution was carried.

State of Minnesota, County of Red Lake—ss.

Whereas, citizens and residents of the village of St. Hilaire in said Red Lake county, appeared personally before the board and offered to pay all expenses incident to the calling of a special election to vote on the question of establishing a county school of agriculture and domestic economy in said village,......It is ordered that said offer be and the same is hereby accepted.

On motion duly carried a recess was taken until 1 o'clock p. m.

Meeting called to order by the chairman at one o'clock p. m.

All members present.

On motion duly carried all school petitions were laid over until the next meeting.

Motion made by Demann seconded by Shaw that the auditor be instructed to advertise for bids for the construction of a pier under the east end of the Clear Water bridge in the city of Red Lake Falls. Motion carried.

The following resolution was offered by Commissioner Demann, who moved its adoption, duly seconded by Commissioner Shaw.

Whereas, the petition of James Enevoldson and Louis A. Kopp, two tax payers in the section of land herein described, has been duly made and filed with the county auditor, praying that the section lines surrounding and the quarter lines subdividing section thirty-five, in the town of Cervais in Red Lake county, be surveyed and established as provided by law.

Therefore, be it resolved, that a hearing be had upon said petition by and before said board on the 18th day of September, 1908, at two o'clock in the afternoon, at the court house, in the city of Red Lake Falls, Minnesota, and that the auditor be and he is hereby instructed to cause due and sufficient notice of said hearing to be given to all persons interested in the manner provided by law.

The following resolution was offered by Commissioner Pigeon, who moved its adoption, duly seconded by Commissioner Demann.

State of Minnesota, County of Red Lake—ss.

Whereas, J. K. Wood elected and qualified until recently, acting as county surveyor of said Red Lake county, has removed from, and ceased to be an inhabitant of said county and state:

It is hereby declared that a vacancy exists in said office of county surveyor of said county.

Therefore, be it resolved, that we appoint and we do hereby appoint C. H. Martz, a competent surveyor and civil engineer residing at St. Hilaire, this county, to the office of county surveyor of said Red Lake county, to serve until the next annual election and until his successor is elected and qualified. Resolution carried.

On motion duly carried the petition of Stephen Singer and others for a public ferry across the Red lake river opposite the Kratka Creamery was laid over until the next meeting of the board.

The petition of A. C. Mayfield and others for a county ditch came up for hearing and the petition was read, no one appearing to be heard against the construction of the proposed ditch, on motion made by Aubol, seconded by Shaw, the following resolution appointing an engineer to survey the route of said proposed ditch was made:

In the matter of the petition of A. C. Mayfield and others for locating and constructing County Ditch No. 32 in the county of Red Lake, state of Minnesota.

Whereas, a petition bearing date the 16th day of July, 1908, signed by A. C. Mayfield and others, praying for the establishment of a certain county ditch in said county, designated and numbered by the county auditor as County Ditch No. 32, the route of which is more fully described in said petition, and a proper bond accompanying the same, have been filed with the county auditor of said county, as by law required.

And whereas, it appears by satisfactory proof to the board of county commissioners of Red Lake county, that due notice of the pendency of said petition and the time and place at which the same would be heard, has been given as required by law:

Now therefore, we, the board of county commissioners of said county, at a special session held this day, do hereby appoint C. H. Martz as a competent and experienced engineer to make an accurate survey of the line of said county ditch from its source to its outlet as provided and specified in and by chapter 230 of the General Laws of 1905, and acts amendatory thereof, and after completing his duties as such engineer to make and file his report with the county auditor, on or before the first day of November, 1908.

By the board:

(Seal.) C. A. LINDQUIST,
Chairman Board County Commissioners,
Of Red Lake County.

Attest:
JOHN B. O'BRIEN,
County Auditor.

On motion made by Aubol, seconded by Shaw and carried unanimously, the following order appointing viewers on County Ditch No. 32 was made.

In the matter of the petition of A. C. Mayfield and others for County Ditch No. 32 in the county of Red Lake, state of Minnesota.

Whereas, a petition bearing date the 16th day of July, A. D. 1908, and signed by A. C. Mayfield and others praying for the establishment of a ditch in said county, designated and numbered by the county auditor as County Ditch No. 32, the route of which is fully described in said petition, together with a proper bond accompanying the same, has been filed with the county auditor of said county, and said county auditor has given due notice of the pendency of said petition, and the said notice has been published and served as by law required, and hearing had on said petition pursuant to said notice, and the said county commissioners of said county have heretofore duly appointed a competent engineer, to-wit: C. H. Martz to make a survey of said ditch.

Now therefore, we, the county board of said county, at a special session held this day, do hereby appoint G. K. Haavi and Joseph Belair and Fred Zaiser, three resident freeholders of said county who are not interested in the construction of said proposed work, and not of kin to any of the parties known to be interested therein, to be viewers of said proposed work and of the route thereof. The said viewers shall first take an oath to faithfully perform their duties as such viewers and thereafter having received a certified copy of the petition for said ditch and of the order appointing them such viewers and of the order of the county auditor of said county designating the time and place of the first meeting of said viewers, shall meet at the time and place specified, in the order of the county auditor aforesaid and shall proceed to view said proposed work, and the land damaged or benefited thereby, and having completed said view and examination of said work shall make and file their report thereof with said county auditor of said county within thirty days from the date of their first meeting. In said report they shall in tabular form give the names of the owners of each tract of land to be benefited or damaged by said proposed work, the description of each tract of land so benefited or damaged (said names of owners to be the same as appears on the county tax duplicates of said county, and the description to be given in legal form), and the total numbers of acres in each of said tracts, the estimated number of acres in each tract of land to be benefited or damaged (as the case may be) the number of acres added to any tract by the total or partial drainage of any meandered lake, or the change of any water course and the location and value of such added lands, the damages, if any, to riparian rights pertaining to any tract, and the amount that each tract of land will be benefited or damaged by the construction of said work. In case said ditch drains, either in whole or in part, any public or corporate road or railroad, or benefits any such road so that the roadbed or traveled tract of any such road will be made better by the construction of said ditch said viewers shall estimate the benefit arising therefrom to said road, roadbeds or railroads, and report said benefits, together with the names of roads and other particulars necessary to identify the corporations, private or public, to be benefited thereby, and the amounts of benefits to each; they shall report as part of said tabular statement the damages awarded to each municipal or other corporation for injury to any road or roadbed, and from the necessary construction and maintenance of any bridge, culverts or other works rendered necessary by the establishment of such ditch, stating the same separately. They shall also report the total estimated benefits in respect to said ditch entire, and branches thereof, if any, and also whether or not, in their opinion, the estimated expense of the construction of said ditch including the damages assessed therefor, is greater than the utility of said proposed ditch; and whether or not said proposed ditch is impracticable for any reason, and if so, stating the reason why it should not be constructed. In making said view and survey of said proposed work and their report thereon, the said viewers shall proceed according to chapter 230 of the General Laws of 1905, and acts amendatory thereof.

Whereas, a petition bearing date the 16th day of July, A. D. 1908, signed by John Gunderson and others praying for the establishment of a ditch in said county, designated and numbered by the county auditor as County Ditch No. 34, the route of which is fully described is said petition together with a proper bond accompanying the same, has been filed with the county auditor of said county and said county auditor has given due notice of the pendency of said petition, and the said notice has been published and served as by law required; and hearing had on said petition pursuant to said notice; and the said county commissioners of said county have heretofore duly appointed a competent engineer, to-wit C. H. Martz, to make a survey of said ditch.

Now therefore, we, the county board of said county at a special session held this day, do hereby appoint Herman F. Anderson and Otto Zaiser and Ole W. Brink, three resident freeholders of said county, who are not interested in the construction of said proposed work, and not of kin to any of the parties known to be interested therein, to be viewers of said proposed work and of the route thereof. The said viewers shall first take an oath to faithfully perform their duties as such viewers, and thereafter, having received a certified copy of the petition for said ditch and of the order appointing them such viewers and of the order of the county auditor of said county designating the time and place of the first meeting of said viewers, shall meet at the time and place specified in the order of the county auditor aforesaid and shall proceed to view said proposed work, and the land damaged or benefited thereby, and, having completed said view and examination of said work, shall make and file their report thereof with said county auditor of said county within thirty days from the date of their first meeting. In said report they shall in tabular form give the names of the owners of each tract of land to be benefited or damaged by said proposed work, the description of each tract of land so benefited or damaged (said names of owners to be the same as appears on the county tax duplicates of said county, and the description to be given in legal form), and the total number of acres in each of said tracts, the estimated number of acres in each tract of land to be benefited or damaged (as the case may be), the number of acres added to any tract by the total or partial drainage of any meandered lake, or the change of any water course and the location and value of such added land; the damage, if any, to riparian rights pertaining to any tract, and the amount that each tract of land will be benefited or damaged by the construction of said work. In case said ditch drains either in whole or in part, any public or corporate road or railroad, or benefits any such road so that the roadbed or traveled tract of any such road will be made better by the construction of said ditch, said viewers shall estimate the benefits arising therefrom to said road, roadbeds or railroad, and report said benefits, together with the names of roads and other particulars necessary to identify the corporation, private or public, to be benefited thereby, and the amounts of benefits to each. they shall report as part of such tabular statement the damages awarded to each municipal or other corporation for injury to any road or roadbed and from the necessary construction and maintenance of any bridge, culverts or other works rendered necessary by the establishment of such ditch stating the same separately. They shall also report the total estimated benefits in respect to said ditch entire, and branches thereof, if any, and also whether or not in their opinion the estimated expense of the construction of said ditch including the damages assessed therefor is greater than the utility of said proposed ditch and whether or not said proposed ditch is impracticable for any reason, and if so, stating the reason why it should not be constructed.

In making said view and survey of said proposed work and their report thereon, the said viewers shall proceed according to chapter 230 of the General Laws of 1905, and acts amendatory thereof.

THE COUNTY BOARD OF RED LAKE COUNTY, MINNESOTA
(Seal.) By C. A. Lindquist, Chairman.

Dated this 19th day of August, A. D. 1908.

Attest:
JOHN B. O'BRIEN,
County Auditor.

Children's Sleep.

As a general rule the lad at school between the ages of 13 and 16 requires nine to ten hours sleep. Growing boys need a large amount of sleep, and when this is denied them, neither their bodies nor their minds can develop properly. An English authority points out this lack of hours of rest falls most heavily on the clever boys.

Women's Fashions.

Like the famous Alice, Fashion would insist that we grow "tallerer and tallerer," and "slimmerer and slimmerer." Skirts are narrower and longer than ever, and the object of every well-conducted costume would seem to be an expressed declaration that women should have only one leg to stand on.—Madame

Soldiers' Head Covering.

The British soldier carries a helmet which weighs nearly 1¼ pounds; the helmet of the Prussian infantryman weighs only a trifle over 14 ounces; while the Italian is still better off with a kepi which turns the scale at between 11 ounces and 12 ounces.

A False Theory.

"The proverb may be right," mused Noah, as he cast one last, long, lingering look before he went in the ark and shut the door, "but this does not seem to fit the category of events in the tide of men's lives, which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune."

America's Peril.

Every foreign observer believes that the grand struggle between the "Haves" and the "Have-nots" which is to mark this century will be fought out first of all upon American soil.—London Spectator.

THE LAND OF GRAIN

—BY—

JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

Author of "American Farmers Building a New Nation in the North"—"Canada—The Land of Greater Hope"—"The Invasion of Canada by American Farmers"—"A Thousand Miles on Horseback Across the Dominion Provinces," Etc., Etc.

Not so very many years ago the majority of people in the United States laughed at the prediction that the day was coming when Western Canada would far outstrip this country in the raising of grain—when, in other words, it would become the great bread-basket of the world. During the past three or four years the enormous production of grain in the Dominion West has thinned the ranks of those who doubted the destiny of Canada's vast grain growing regions; the crops of this year will dispel the doubts of the remaining few. From Winnipeg westward to the foothills of Alberta, over a country nearly a thousand miles in width, the grain production this year will be something to almost stagger the belief of those hundreds of thousands of American farmers whose average yield is not more than from ten to fifteen bushels of wheat to the acre, and who are finding that their product is also outclassed in quality by that of their northern neighbors.

The enormous grain crop of this year in the Canadian West may truthfully be said to be the production of "a few pioneers." Only a small percentage of the unnumbered millions of acres of grain land are under cultivation, notwithstanding the fact that tens of thousands of homesteads were taken up last year. And yet, when all the figures are in, it will be found that the settlers of the western prairies have raised this year more than 125,000,000 bushels of wheat, 100,000,000 bushels of oats and 25,000,000 bushels of barley. It has been a "fortune making year" for thousands of American farmers who two or three years ago owned hardly more than the clothes upon their backs, and whose bumper crops from their homesteads will yield them this season anywhere from $1,500 to $2,500 each, more money than many of them have seen at one time in all their lives.

Very recently I passed through the western provinces from Winnipeg to Calgary, and in the words of a fellow passenger, who was astonished by what he saw from the car windows in Manitoba, we were, metaphorically speaking, in a "land of milk and honey." The country was one great sweep of ripening grain. In fact, so enormous was the crop, that at the time there were grave doubts as to the possibility of GETTING ENOUGH BINDER TWINE TO SUPPLY THE DEMAND. A situation like this has never before been known in the agricultural history of any country.

Before I made my first trip through the Dominion west I doubted very much the stories that I had heard of this so-called "grain wonderland" across the border. I believed, as unnumbered thousands of others believed, that the stories were circulated mostly to induce immigration. I quickly found that I was wrong. As one Alberta farmer said to me a few weeks ago, "If the whole truth were told about this country I don't suppose you could find one American in ten who would believe it."

This year the prospects of the wheat crop of Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta are an average of over TWENTY-FIVE BUSHELS TO THE ACRE, and that this grain is far superior to that raised in the states is proved by our own government statistics, which show that American millers are importing millions of bushels of B "Canadian hard" to mix with the home product in order that THIS HOME PRODUCT MAY BE RAISED TO THE REQUIRED STANDARD. It is a peculiar fact that while the Dominion Government is anxious for its western provinces to fill up with the very best of immigrants, there has been no blatant or sensational advertising of those lands. For this reason it is probable that not one American farmer out of fifty knows that Canada wheat now holds the world's record of value—that, in other words, it is the best wheat on earth, and that more of it is grown to the acre than anywhere else in the world.

A brief study of climatic conditions, and those things which go to make a climate, will show that the farther one travels northward from the Montana border the milder the climate becomes—up to a certain point. In other words, the climate at Edmonton, Alberta, is far better than that of Denver, 1,500 miles south; and while thousands of cattle and sheep are dying because of the severity of the winters in Wyoming, Montana and other western states, the cattle, sheep and horses of Alberta GRAZE ON THE RANGES ALL WINTER WITH ABSOLUTELY NO SHELTER. This is all largely because sea-currents and air-currents have to do with the making of the climate of temperate regions. For instance, why is it that California possesses such a beautiful climate, with no winter at all, while the New England states on a parallel with it have practically six months of winter out of twelve?

It is because of that great sweep of warm water known as the "Japan current," and this same current not only affects the westernmost of the Dominion provinces, but added to its influence are what are known as the "chinook winds"—steady and undeviating air-currents which sweep over the great wheat regions of Western Canada. There are good scientific reasons why these regions are capable of producing better crops than our own western and central states, but best of all are the proofs of it in actual results. This year, for instance, as high as one hundred bushels of oats to the acre will be gathered in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta, and some wheat will go AS HIGH AS FIFTY BUSHELS TO THE ACRE, though of course this is an unusual yield.

Last spring it was widely advertised in American papers that Alberta's winter wheat crop was a failure. In fact, this is Alberta's banner year in grain production, as it is Saskatchewan's and Manitoba's, and from figures already in it is estimated that Alberta's wheat will yield on an average of THIRTY-FIVE BUSHELS TO THE ACRE. In many parts of the province returns will show a yield of as high as FIFTY bushels to the acre and it is freely predicted by many that when the official figures are in a yield of at least forty-five instead of thirty-five bushels to the acre will be shown.

At the time of my last journey through the Canadian West, when my purpose was largely to secure statistical matter for book use, I solicited letters from American settlers in all parts of the three provinces, and most of these make most interesting reading. The letter was written by A. Kaltenbrunner, whose postoffice address is Regina, Saskatchewan.

"A few years ago," he says, "I took up a homestead for myself and also one for my son. The half section which we own is between Rouleau and Drinkwater, adjoining the Moosejaw creek, and is a low, level and heavy land. Last year we put in 100 acres of wheat which went 25 bushels to the acre. Every bushel of it was 'No. 1.' That means the best wheat that can be raised on earth—worth 90 cents a bushel at the nearest elevators. We also threshed 9,000 bushels of first class oats out of 160 acres. Eighty acres was fall plowing AND YIELDED NINETY BUSHELS TO THE ACRE. We got 53 cents a bushel clear. All our grain was cut in the last week of the month of August. We will make more money out of our crops this year than last. For myself, I feel compelled to say that Western Canada crops cannot be checked, even by unusual conditions."

An itemized account shows a single year's earnings of this settler and his son to be as follows:

|---|---|
| 2,500 bushels of wheat at 90 cents a bushel | $2,250 |
| 9,000 bushels of oats at 53 cents a bushel | 4,770 |
| Total | $7,020 |

It will be seen by the above that this man's oat crop was worth twice as much as his wheat crop. While the provinces of western Canada will for all time to come be the world's greatest wheat growing regions, oats are running the former grain a close race for supremacy. The soil and climatic conditions in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta are particularly favorable to the production of oats, and this grain, like the wheat, runs a far greater crop to the acre than in even the best grain producing states of the union. Ninety bushels to the acre is not an unusual yield, whole homesteads frequently running this average. And this is not the only advantage Western Canada oats have over those of the United States, for in weight they run between forty and fifty pounds to the bushel, while No. 1 wheat goes to sixty-two pounds to the bushel. In fact, so heavy is Canadian grain of all kinds, and especially the wheat, that throughout the west one will see cars with great placards upon them, which read:

When I made my first trip through the Canadian West a few years ago I found thousands of settlers living in rude shacks, tent shelters and homes of logs and clay. Today one will find these old "homes" scattered from Manitoba to the Rockies, but they are no longer used by human tenants. Modern homes have taken their place—for it has come to be a common saying in these great grain regions that, "The first year a settler is in the land he earns a living; the second he has money enough to build himself a modern home and barns; the third he is independent." And as extreme as this statement may seem to those hundreds of thousands of American farmers who strive for a meager existence, it is absolutely true. I am an American, as patriotic, I believe, as most of our people—but even at that I cannot but wish that these people, whose lives are such an endless and unhappy grind, might know of the new life that is awaiting them in this last great west—this "land of greater hope," where the farmer is king, and where the wealth all rests in his hands. As one American farmer said to me, "It is hard to pull up stakes and move a couple of thousand miles." And so it is—or at least it appears to be. But in a month it can be done. And the first year, when the new settler reaps a greater harvest than he has ever possessed before, he will rise with 200,000 others of his people in Western Canada and thank the government that has given him, free of cost, a new life, a new home, and new hopes—which has made of him, in fact, "A man among men, a possessor of wealth among his people."

Thoreau's Sensible Answer.

When the forest-haunting hermit Thoreau lay on his deathbed, a Calvinistic friend called to make inquiry regarding his soul. "Henry," he said, anxiously, "have you made your peace with God?" "John," replied the dying naturalist, in a whisper, "I didn't know that God and myself had quarreled!"

HER GOOD FORTUNE

After Years Spent in Vain Effort.

Mrs. Mary E. H. Rouse, of Cambridge, N. Y., says: "Five years ago I had a bad fall and it affected my kidneys. Severe pains in my back and hips became constant, and sharp twinges followed any exertion. The kidney secretions were badly disordered. I lost flesh and grew too weak to work. Though constantly using medicine I despaired of being cured until I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. Then relief came quickly, and in a short time I was completely cured. I am now in excellent health."

FULLY FILLED THE BILL.

Aunt Mandy Was Thoroughly Satisfied with New Husband.

Aunt Mandy is an old colored woman who for years has done washing for several families. She has had several matrimonial experiences, and when her last husband died one of her customers attempted to condole with her.

"I was very sorry to hear of your husband's death, Aunt Mandy," she said.

"Ya'as, ma'am," said Aunt Mandy. "He was a pow'ful good man."

"What did he die of?"

"Ah really don't know, ma'am."

"You don't know- Gracious! Couldn't the doctor tell you?"

"Ah didn't have no doctah, ma'am," said Aunt Mandy. "He jes done died a natch'ral death."

"I hear you are married again," remarked her patron one day.

"Ya'as, ma'am," giggled Aunt Mandy. "I was done married las' Sunday."

"And is your new husband equal to the last?"

"Ya'as, indeedy, ma'am," said Aunt Mandy. "He's jes as equal, if not equaller."

PRECISE.

Miss Sentimental—Tell me, are you sure, Milton, that I'm the first you've asked to marry you?"

Mr. Manyack—Do you mean this present month or do you include last as well?

On the Doctors.

Mrs. Mary G. Baker Eddy, who, of course, has no faith in medicine, told a Western Christian Scientist, at one of her latest audiences, an anecdote about a friend of hers.

This friend, a thin and nervous woman, could not sleep. She visited her physician and the man said:

"Oh, no, doctor," the patient replied.

"Well," said the physician, "just keep a pitcher of milk and some biscuit beside you, and every night, the last thing you do, make a light meal."

"But doctor," cried the lady, "you told me on no account to eat anything before retiring."

"Pooh, pooh," said the doctor, "that was three months ago. Science has made enormous strides since then."

A Unanimous Vote.

A German-American who had recently arrived at the estate of riches attended his first banquet. The wine was particularly vile, and so several gentlemen who were seated near the German were quite satisfied to have him empty the bottles that had been set apart for their common use. Neither the quality nor the quantity of the wine in the least disturbed the Teuton, and, after draining the last glass, he looked around jovially and said: "Shentlemen, I haf now drunken all your wine and safed you the trouble of trinking vat you did not like. I tink you ought to vote me a public tank." They did.—Lippincott's.

REMAINS THE SAME.

Well Brewed Postum Always Palatable

The flavour of Postum, when boiled according to directions, is always the same—mild, distinctive, and palatable. It contains no harmful substance like caffeine, the drug in coffee, and hence may be used with benefit at all times.

"Believing that coffee was the cause of my torpid liver, sick headache and misery in many ways," writes an Ind. lady, "I quit and bought a package of Postum about a year ago.

"My husband and I have been so well pleased that we have continued to drink Postum ever since. We like the taste of Postum better than coffee, as it has always the same pleasant flavour, while coffee changes its taste with about every new combination or blend.

"Since using Postum I have had no more attacks of gall colic, the heaviness has left my chest, and the old, common, every-day headache is a thing unknown." "There's a Reason."

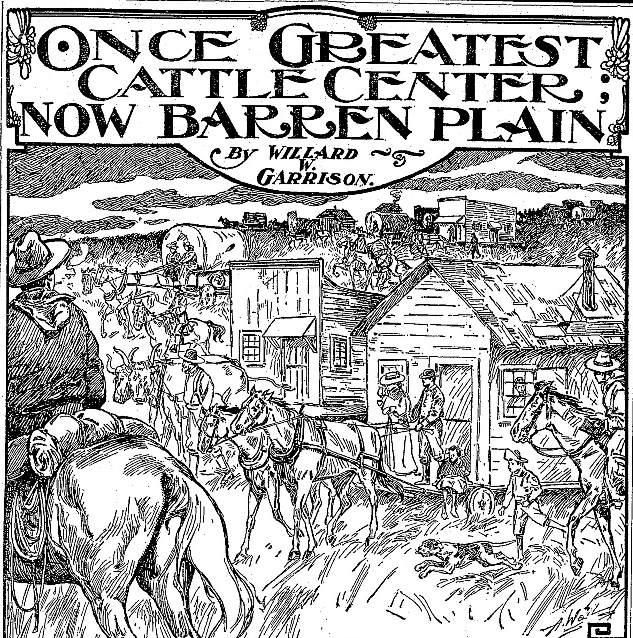
ONCE GREATEST CATTLE CENTER; NOW BARREN PLAIN

By WILLARD W. GARRISON.



AMERICAN towns and cities, especially in the west, spring up in a night and generally they flourish and develop with each year. Evarts, situated on the Missouri river in the north-central part of South Dakota, was no exception to the rule in its early life, but to-day if you should happen to paddle up the Missouri past where the waters of the Moreau enter, the first thought that would enter your mind when you struck the former site of Evarts, would be that a cyclone had wiped out the place.

However, such is not the case. Evarts is now only a western plain and this by its own volition. Only a few weeks ago Evarts was the biggest cattle-shipping center of the United States. To-day there is no Evarts. There is not even a railroad track; the big shipping depot has been torn down, here and there a splinter left when the buildings were taken away, tells the tale of a once-flourishing city.

And the whole reason for the people of Evarts getting out of their chosen town was because the railroad wanted to find a suitable spot on the Missouri river to build a bridge. The railway officials were extending their line to the coast and the worst obstacle in the path of the gigantic enterprise was to find a place to hang the bridge. Eventually the engineers settled upon a site several miles north of Evarts and at that point a flourishing town, known as Mobridge sprang up Evarts people were offered any site for their town that they might select along the extension.

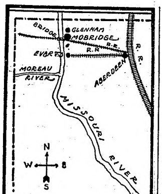
Then the exodus began. Husky cattlemen hitched horses and oxen to their houses and barns, some tore the edifices down, and they were hauled across the prairie, much like the schooners of '49 fame. Glenham and Mobridge, the latter's name being a contraction of the words Missouri bridge, received most of the Evarts people. When everybody had left, the railroad tore down its depot, great gangs of men jerked the tracks from their cedar ties and the short line from Aberdeen was a thing of the past.

Across the barren plains between Aberdeen and Evarts millions upon millions of cattle of every description had been carted in great long freight cars to be eventually disposed of in Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Louis, New York, Buffalo and in fact all of the big eastern marts of trade. On August 1, 1908, came the official ending of the town. All its books were closed on that date; its employes were officially dismissed then and their salaries to that time were paid them, although most of the public officials and their families had left Evarts several weeks, some of them months before.

The casual observer, perhaps in a launch may go up to the landing at the center of the town and there tie his craft for a tour of inspection, but his efforts to unearth the mysterious about what was once Evarts will be fruitless, for everything of any value whatsoever has been carried away and scarcely a stick of wood was left by the economical natives, who now call themselves citizens of other South Dakota villages.

Scores of towns have suffered the same experience which befell Evarts, but the latter's passage to oblivion was perhaps more sudden, more spectacular and more regretted than any which have got into the public prints in a decade or more.

If you had "happened" into Evarts two years ago and then dropped a few days ago you would pinch yourself twice to see if you were awake. This by reason of the contrast. Two years ago you would have seen roughly clad cattlemen hurrying hither and thither, engines puffing along the sidetracks, trainloads of some of the best cattle which the west produces moving east in the direction of Aberdeen, you would have seen a blue-coated minion of the law stalking along the passenger depot spurting tobacco juice at the station agent's dog, but to-day even the dog is missing from the scenery thereabouts.



Moving day started several months ago and the freight train conductor, leaving with the last load of live cattle which was to pass out of this typical American city, was almost moved to tears as he stood on the rear platform of his caboose when the train reached a rise in the plain and looked back upon the town which had been his "hang-out" since he entered the employment of the road.

The writer, making a quick trip from Evarts to Aberdeen, was lounging in the caboose. The sight became unbearable to the railroad man and he re-entered the trainman's apartments. "I've seen that there burg grow up from the time when ole Jess Atkins lived in a shanty down by the river just south o' town and owned six head o' cattle. There warn't no spur from Aberdeen then," he soliloquized, "but Jess used to drive his cows across the prairie to where the river jines the Moreau and there they'd ferry the hull outfit across for a couple o' dollars. Then he'd have a nice long ride to Aberdeen.

"Once when Jess' wife and darters came down to live with him, the ole man was ketched by some rustlers from up north and they stole his pony, cows and money. Jess had to hoof it back to his shack. Well, sence thet time y'd be s'prised how the place has growed. I was on a river sidewheeler then. I was the pilot. Well, pretty soon Evarts was boomed and all us young cubs got the fever to stake off a bit o' land and set up in some kind o' bizness, we didn't care much what and we didn't know what it'd turn out to be when we staked.

"Well, finally I accepted a loocrative job as brakie on this line and five years ago I got permoted to conductor. I ain't goin' to suffer, whomsoever, as they've give me a job doin' th' same thing from Oakes to Aberdeen when I get through with this trip."

And the conductor is not a romancer, but his feelings were echoed through the western air and in every home in Evarts when it became known that the railway was to build a bridge which would take the business away from this town and allow the building of a new city where the river was spanned.

Appropriately the new town became known as Mobridge and it is to-day what Evarts was several years ago, a flourishing, hustling little burg with everything ahead of its inhabitants, and whatever their past may have been, is forgotten.

While Glenham received many of the Evarts people with open arms, the greater majority went to Mobridge, for they declared they saw greater possibilities there because business could be more easily transferred from Evarts to Mobridge.

So if you should happen to be in the vicinity of Mobridge, ask the postmaster, the man at the wharf, the station agent at the depot or almost anybody the road to where Evarts once was and take a jaunt down that way. It's only a few miles south and when you imagine what the little city once was and what it is to-day, perhaps you will be repaid for the stroll. Mobridge is to-day a typical little western town where some one or other is continually erecting a shack which he and his family call home. Homes spring up in the night and when their owners grow tired of them they are either sold for fire-wood or some one, perhaps poorer, accepts them for a small sum.

Western hospitality, a tradition, which is told in fiction works and which actually exists, is one of the first themes of Mobridge and the stranger, poor or wealthy, is just as sure of welcome under Mobridge roofs as he would be under his own. Of course there are cattle rustlers in that part of South Dakota, but thanks to real western cow tactics, they are few. Vigilance committees have made stealing cattle such a hazardous method of ekeing out a living that few care to risk their health in that manner.

Money in Apple Orchards.

Tasmania has long been known as the apple land of the south, but few at home have any real idea of the money that can be made, and is being made, out of apple growing in that island. Last year, for instance, there were many small orchards in the south which returned as much as 1,200 bushels to the acre, and one owner of four acres, who picked over 4,000 bushels of marketable fruit, which he sold at four shillings a bushel, reaped a gross return of £800. As his expenses at the outside would not be more than £100, his profit an acre worked out at something like £175. Of course, this was an extreme case, but orchards of 20 acres and upward averaged full 500 bushels an acre, and yielded a clear net profit of quite £1,500 in each case. The area actually planted at the present time in domestic and commercial orchards is about 20,000 acres, and upward of half a million cases of apples were exported to this country last year.—Britannia.

The proud beauty eyed him with scorn.

"What!" she exclaimed. "Do you think I would marry a dried up, insignificant, homely little man like you? You must be crazy!"

"No, Miss Pinkie," he said, looking around for his hat; "my mind is all right, but you have convinced me that it's in the wrong body."

BREAKING IN NEW MEN.

One Corporation Publishes a Text Book For New Employees.

A large corporation has lately shown its appreciation of the value of giving new employees a thorough general knowledge of the business by publishing a book describing in an interesting fashion all the details of the company's work.

It is a volume of over 200 pages, illustrated with facsimile cuts of various reports and other forms used. A copy is furnished every employee, and he is expected to master not merely the portions pertaining to his own work, but the entire book.

Quizzes are held at frequent intervals throughout the organization, and dismissal is the penalty for ignorance of any subject treated in the volume.

"It costs us about $2,000 to publish this book," says the president of the company, "but we consider it money well invested, and we are planning to issue a new and up to date edition every year.

"When a man enters our employ he is told to read this manual and do nothing else until he has thoroughly mastered it. This gives him a general knowledge of the business, and if there are any points he does not understand they are cleared up before he begins work."—System.

TRAVELERS ABROAD.

A Document That Should Be Carried In One's Pocketbook.

Replying to an inquiry about the disposition of the body of an American dying in London, our consul general offers some advice to citizens of this country traveling abroad. He says: "If a citizen of the United States be traveling abroad unaccompanied it would be well for him to carry in his satchel or pocketbook written instructions as to what he desires should be done in the event of anything happening to him. The envelope containing such instructions should be headed, 'Instructions in the event of my death.' Inclosed he should give his home address or the address of a friend in the United States, so that communication could be made, or the address of any friend or business connection on this side could be mentioned with the same object and for the purpose of obtaining necessary funds. I have been informed on credible authority that a person has no legal right to control the disposition of his remains, although I have no doubt relatives or friends would respect the wishes of the deceased. In the event of the death in this country of a person domiciled in the United States at any of the hotels an undertaker is at once called in and the remains removed therefrom, provided always the deceased has had proper medical attendance and that the doctor attending gives a certificate of death. If the death is sudden, the coroner of the district is at once notified and an inquest is held, the body in the meantime being removed to a public mortuary pending result of the inquest. If the verdict of death from natural causes be rendered, the coroner signs an order and gives it to the representative of the deceased, who instructs the undertaker what to do. The transportation of the remains is in the hands of the friends or the representative of the deceased and is not controlled by any local or government authority."

In Another Voice.

As the pastor of the Zion's Hill church looked down at his parishioners, to whom he had been giving thirty-five minutes of sound doctrine, his face took on a less benignant expression.

"Bredren an' sisters," he said, "I want to warn you against one t'ing, an' dat is t'inkin' ebery man dat don't hab jes' de same views you got is a no-'count religionist.

"I don't want to hear so much talk about 'wolves in sheep's clothing'' as I bene hearin'. You don' want to settle it in yo' minds dat a man's a wolf in sheep's clothin' jes' because he don' bl'at exactly like you do."—Youth's Companion.

Marlin

For shooting the swift flying, heavily feathered ducks and geese the Marlin 12-gauge repeating shotgun has no superior. This gun is exceedingly strong in construction and yet is not heavy. It is bored to throw an excellent pattern with great penetration. The solid top keeps out the weather and the brush and twigs of the blind, and the side ejector prevents the empty shells from being a nuisance to the shooter. It's the best bad weather gun.

The Marlin 12-gauge is suited to all forms of bird and trap shooting, and for durability, strength and ease of action is unexcelled. Made for both black and smokeless powders and for heavy loads. Two separate extractors make sure work.

A Farmer's Letter----Read It Twice.

Mayfield Township, Sept. 7, 1908

To my neighbor Farmers and the Voters of Red Lake County in general:

Quite recently I have been approached by various parties who wished to have me take an interest and use my influence, if I have any, against the interest of Hon. J. J. Opsahl in his candidacy for re-election as Representative for this Legislative District. Some of those who have approached me have spoken of Mr. Opsahl in such terms as "crank", "grafter" and other equally elegant titles

Some four years ago I moved to my present homestead in Mayfield township from near Felton, in Clay county. I lived in Clay county for several years and about thirteen years ago I got acquainted with Mr. Opsahl who kept a general store in Felton at that time. As a regular patron of his store for some years I had ample opportunity to get well acquainted with Mr. Opsahl, and it gives me genuine pleasure to state here and now that I always found him square, clean-minded and honorable in the highest degree. As chairman of the Board of Supervisors of the township in which I lived I also had much to do with Mr. Opsahl, who, at that time, was the leading spirit in the community in behalf of good roads and good drainage. The teritory around Felton, thanks to Mr. Opsahl's energetic efforts, became the best drained and best developed section of Clay county and had some of the best roads in the state. Since leaving Felton and moving to Bemidji Mr. Opsahl has been tireless in his efforts along these lines of Drainage, Good Roads and General Development. Two years ago he was elected to represent this district in the legislature and I have watched his record closely and find that he has kept on pushing forward the same ideas of building roads, ditches and bridges, and developing and improving the country generally for the benefit of the people living in it. He was Chairman of the Committee on Immigration and a very active member of the committee on Drainage (he was chairman of the House sub-committee). He took a most active part in securing legislation along those lines and was very successful. No man who knows J. J. Opsahl well but knows he is a man of sterling honesty instead of a grafter. Neither can he be called in any way a "crank", unless he be a crank on the subject of public improvements and the best way to get them.

There are two other candidates running in opposition to Mr. Opsahl but not being personally acquainted with them I do not feel much disposed to criticise them. One of them is an attorney from Bemidji. A newspaper published on the reservation saye he is very bald-headed and I have heard that he is the candidate of the liquor interests.

The other candidate is H. E. Ives, publisher of the St. Hilaire Spectator. I do not know very much about him either but I read considerable about him last winter when he tried by injunction proceedings to knock out the action of the county board when that body let the county printing to an independent bidder at a much lower figure than was asked by a combination of county newspaper publishers who have for years been led by Mr. Ives. This combination had for its object the collection of the highest rates allowed by law for the county printing, and the taxpayers had to pay the bills. Otherwise, I understand that Mr. Ives is nearing the half century mark in years and is quite large for his age, weighing some three or four hundred pounds. Those who know him well state that he has spent nearly all of his life in having a good time and looking for the easy places, and it is getting late for us to expect him to change his ways,

I wish to state most emphatically that Mr. Opsahl is neither a booze-fighter nor a broken down old sport. He is not, and never was, a loafer or a man to shirk his duty. He is a man who can be relied upon at all times to do his best for his entire district. His platform is well told in the word "Development". The only platform I can find Mr. Ives has is that he is 'pledged to no interests save home interests'. This is very evidently a phrase got up to fool the voters and commits Mr. Ives to nothing—which is most likely what he intends trying to do if nominated and elected.

Knowing Mr. Opsahl as I have known him for vears I believe him entitled to re-election. More than that, I believe he is entitled to large majorities in every county in the district. Every farmer should get out and vote at the primaries. When the farmers dont go and vote the voters in the cities nominate candidates to suit their own interests and the farmers get left. Therefore I urge the farmers in Red Lake County this year to make a special effort to attend the primaries and—Vote for Opsahl.

Yours for good men in office,

H. C. JARR.

Bound To Grand Jury.

Robert Kolseth, of Wyandotte township is now in the county jail awaiting the action of the grand jury on a charge of horse stealing. A few days ago Robert stole a team belonging to H. R. Kolseth, and drove to Crookston with it. He sold the team for $100 and spent a part of the moncy having a good time. He then went to Thief Rive Falls and was arrested while trying to get out of that town on a freight train. He was taken before Judge Bishop who bound him over to the grand jury.

Kolseth is about nineteen years of age and has acquired quite an appetitte for booze and its accessories. He may be given a Reformatory sentence if he should decide to enter a plea of guilty.

For County Attorney, Vote for MICHELET.

East Indian Magic.

A former French chief justice in Chandernagore, Jacolliot, gives an account of several curious performances that were displayed for his benefit by a yogi named Govinda-Swami on the terrace of his own house. Being by no means credulous, Jacolliot took every precaution to prevent deception. Fine sand was strewn on the ground in order to make as even a surface as possible. Jacolliot was asked to seat himself at a table upon which were a pencil and paper. The fakir carefully laid a piece of wood upon the sand and announced that whatever figures Jacolliot might draw on the paper the piece of wood would transcribe precisely upon the sand. The yogi stretched out his hand, and the wooden piece immediately copied upon the sand the most complicated and twisted figures that Jacolliot drew. When the Frenchman stopped writing the piece of wood also came to a standstill. The fakir stood at a distance against a wall, while Jacolliot held the paper and pencil in such a way that the Indian could not possibly see what he was inscribing.—Harper's Weekly.

To the voters of Red Lake County

I am a candidate for the Rebublican nomination for Superintendent of Schools. Since the voters have the selection to make, they naturally desire to know the professional qualifications of those seeking the position.

As a young boy, I came here with my parents from Indiana in 1883 and in 1895 began teaching in the district schools of this county. Since then during the greater part of thirteen years, I have taught in the district and graded schools.

In 1907 I graduated from the advanced course of study of the Moorhead State Normal School and was employed as princibal of the graded school at Burtrum, Minnesota, the same year.

My experience in all kinds of school work has made me thoroly familiar with our educational system and its needs.

As it is impossible for me to meet all the voters in the county, I respectfully submit my application to you with the assurance that if nominated and elected, I shall do everything in my power to increase the efficiency of onr schools.

Truly yours,
HERMAN F. ANDERSON.

MESABA TOWNS OUT OF DANGER

A SLIGHT FALL OF RAIN OVER THE ENTIRE SECTION GIVES PROMISE OF CHECK.

The Worst Peril Has Passed. Range Cities and Towns Believed to be Safe. The Forest Surrounding Still Burning.

Hibbing, Minn., Sept. 10.—Beginning at 8:30 last night the prayed-for rain fell like a benediction on the fire-stricken Mesabe range, and the people worn with four days and nights ceaseless vigil and fighting for their homes against ceaseless odds, gave a sigh of relief.

The fall was short, lasting only some twenty minutes, and at no time was it sufficiently heavy to make a serious impression on the fires.

Reports from other points on the range are meager, but as far as received they show the rainfall was general and corresponding relief was felt. With a good down pour the danger from the forest fires would be a thing of the past, and even as it is the greater number of the towns seem to be out of danger.

Virginia, Minn., Sept. 10.—The first promise of relief that cannot be bought with money came to the terror-stricken people on the Mesabe range last night in the form of a little shower. A few drops of rain began falling shortly after 8 o'clock, and while the rainfall was insignificant, not being more than enough to wet the pavements, it gave the people renewed hopes that the long prayed for rain is soon to come. The weather indications are that the sprinkle this evening is only a forerunner of what is to come before morning. Dark clouds—rain clouds, not smoke clouds—hide the stars, and the air has that peculiar smell and feeling that precedes a heavy rain.

Last night a bad fire was raging on the hillside west of Mountain Iron. Several thousand ties piled along the line of the Great Northern railway were destroyed this afternoon. The fire endangered the town of Mountain Iron, but the men who were sent from the mines to protect the village were able to keep the flames away.

Last night a severe blaze was raging in the forest several miles southeast of Buhl. While the wind still was blowing lightly from the northwest, the citizens of Buhl have guarded against any danger that may come from the southeast by starting back fires which soon will leave a wide burned space between the two menacing walls of flame.

A RACE WAR.

Negroes of Kansas, Mo., Arming Themselves—Trouble Feared.

Kansas City, Mo., Sept. 9.—Since the killing of a white man by a negro here last Saturday there has been a growing alarm of a race war among the colored population and the police have learned that many of them are purchasing firearms. A pawnbroker on East Eighteenth street reported that the negroes had purchased all the shotguns and revolvers in his store, besides a large amount of ammunition.

Robert Maupin, another negro, probably fatally wounded himself while cleaning a revolver, which it is believed he intended to carry for his own protection.

Excited groups of colored men have been dispersed by the police, but no violence has occurred.

DEATH IN HOTEL FIRE.

Four Guests Lose Their Lives While Trying to Escape.

Denver, Colo., Sept. 9.—One man plunged to his death and a half dozen others threw themselves from windows, sustaining probably fatal injuries in a panic that followed the discovery of fire in the Belmont hotel early yesterday.

The guests awakened from their sleep by the cry of fire, rushed pell mell into the hall, hemmed in by the flames from all sides and in an effort to escape fought and struggled while rescuers were forced back by columns of smoke and the mounting flames.

There were nearly 100 persons in house asleep when the fire broke out.

Valuable Package Missing.

Portland, Ore., Sept. 9.—A package entrusted to the care of the Wells Fargo company at Salem, Ore., by J. R. Albert, president of the Capital National bank of that city and addressed to Joseph M. Meyers at the Portland hotel in this city, containing notes and other valuable papers representing $52,000, is strangely missing.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

New Variety of Rye.

A new variety of winter rye, called Minnesota No. 2, has been originated by the Minnesota Experiment Station, and is now ready for distribution. This rye was obtained by selection from the Swedish rye and is an exceptionally high yielder. The average yield upon the station grounds for the past eight years is 40.4 bushels per acre, while the average yield of other varieties for the state in the same time was 19.2 bushels per acre. One field of 1.9 acres yielded 48 bushels per acre this fall.

Minnesota No. 2 rye is offered to the farmers of the state in two to five-bushel lots at the price of $1.25 per bushel, including sacks. Seed will be supplied either by the station or by farmers who have co-operated with the station as seed growers. Communications in regard to the rye should be addressed to Andrew Boss, agriculturist, Minnesota Experiment Station, St. Paul, Minn.

Packing Plant Assured.

Minneapolis—A three million dollar packing plant for Minneapolis, to be established by the Armour Packing company of Chicago is now assured. J. Ogden Armour of Chicago, head of the immense Chicago concern, was in Minneapolis to meet with B. F. Nelson, president of the Commercial club, and arranged the preliminaries for the construction, beginning early next spring, of the largest and most modern plant of its kind in the world.

What will be of especial interest to Minneapolis people is that the Armour plant is to be much larger than at first contemplated. Sufficient property was purchased at the outset to provide for a plant much larger than at that time planned. Minneapolis is to lose nothing by the delay, now that it has been decided to so enlarge the plant that it will not only be the best equipped plant in the world, but will also be the largest single packing plant in operation.

Minnesota River.

St. Peter—Anticipating action by the legislature in regard to the improvement of the Minnesota river, George A. Ralph, state drainage engineer, has prepared a set of maps covering all surveys made of that river. The improvement of the Minnesota has been a subject of much discussion for several weeks, and the indications are that this will be crystallized by action in the coming legislature.

If the legislature sees fit to appoint committees to investigate the subject, Mr. Ralph will be able to give them full information concerning the course of the stream, the nature of the surrounding country, the number of drainage ditches now emptying into the river and the rainfall for the past twenty-five years.

The State Fair.

Hamline—Attended by 40,075 more persons and netting in ticket sales $31,150 more than the fair of 1907, the Minnesota state fair of 1908 showed, by the balancing of its books last night, that its gratifying success had been attended by a wonderful increase in attendance and profits.

The total for ticket sales for the week amounted to $162,707, which is not including about $11,000 worth of tickets for which the money has not yet been returned. Last year the grand total for tickets was $131,557. Saturday night's receipts were $14,919 as compared to $13,058 for the last day, last year.

The total attendance for the week was 326,753 as compared to 286,678 for the entire week last year. Saturday's attendance was 34,469 as against 32,536 for the same day last year.

Grasshoppers.

St. Paul—F. L. Washburn, state entomologist, foresees a grasshopper plague next year unless farmers take active measures now to prevent it.

"I note that grasshoppers have been troublesome this season from the various complaints I have received from many localities," said he. "The outlook for next summer is somewhat alarming possibly, unless measures are taken this fall to prevent an outbreak. I would therefore suggest that the farmers who note grasshoppers laying eggs this month, or early next month, in their land, should not fail to plow as late as possible after all eggs have been laid, thus turning them under and preventing their issuing next spring."

NEWS NOTES.

Minneapolis—John Moore of Buffalo Lake, Minn., fell down a flight of back stairs at the home of his son, D. H. Moore, 865 Randolph, and broke his neck, dying a few minutes later in a nearby room.

West St. Paul—Crazed by liquor, Joseph Einberger killed himself and fatally wounded his wife. The tragedy was enacted in the rear of the Einberger residence, Logan avenue and Robert street.

Cokato—The large barn belonging to A. P. Peterson caught fire from some unknown cause last night and burned to the ground before the work of the fire department became effective.

St. Paul—Gen. C. C. Andrews, state forestry commissioner, talks of the Mesaba disaster and blames carelessness of settlers for most of the losses resulting from forest fires.

Duluth—William Fossback, an employe of the Scott Graff Lumber company, was fatally hurt in the Northern Pacific yards today.

ANCIENT "FOOT FERRY."

Means of Communication Between Virginia and Maryland Shores.

Richmond, Va.—The "foot-ferry" is one of the ancient institutions that survive in the old and honorable town of Alexandria, Va. In all that long stretch of majestic river from the capital of the United States to great Chesapeake bay, there is neither bridge nor modern ferry between the Virginia and Maryland shores. Though the counties that border the Potomac on either side are populous and prosperous, communication between the two sides of the river seems difficult to men not to the manor born, yet the conditions are accepted as natural and regular by natives.

Between Alexandria and the Maryland shore the Potomac is a mile wide. The Maryland lands are thickly settled. Because of circuitous roads the dwellers there must drive ten miles to Washington, whereas in a straight line the distance is but five. That country has yet to be traversed by a trolley line. Many of the people on the east side of the river cross to Alexandria and take steamboat or trolley to Washington. The means of communication between Alexandria, a city of 15,000 inhabitants, and the opposite shore, is a "foot-ferry"—or more accurately a hand ferry—for the ferry is a small boat rowed by a veteran river man. The boat is rigged with a sail and when the wind favors, which is not often, the ferryman rests on his oars. A trip is made every hour. When the accompanying picture was taken the sail was in use.

The ferryman is W. H. Wheatley. He has spent his life on the river and has been conducting the ferry for many years. He plies from a slip between two of the principal wharves in Alexandria and a decaying quay called "Fox's Ferry" on the other side. Fox's Ferry was a hustling place before the age of steam, a man named Fox operating an endless chain ferry across the river at that point.

GOODRICH NOW SENIOR OFFICER.

Rear Admiral Heads Active List with Retirement of Evans.

Washington.—Rear Admiral Caspar F. Goodrich, commandant of the New York navy yard, who becomes the senior officer of the active list of the United States navy with the retirement of Admiral Evans, first saw service at the age of 17 while taking part in running down confederate commerce destroyers on the old fighting ship, the Macedonian. His career has been a notable one, including service in two wars, directing the destruction of Cuban cables, the organization of the coast signal service, the direction for a time of the Naval War college and command of the Pacific squadron when it afforded signal assistance to the sufferers in the San Francisco earthquake. Admiral Goodrich was born in Philadelphia in 1847 and graduated from the Naval Academy in 1864.

Bridge to Moses' Cradle.

Since the days of the Pharaohs Egypt has been the scene of some remarkable feats of engineering, the latest being the construction of a bridge from Cairo to the island of Rodah in the Nile, where, according to tradition, the child Moses was found in the bulrushes.

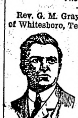
The bridge, which is 1,740 feet long, and 65 feet broad, has 14 spans, besides the central span of 209 feet, which, when swung open, leaves a clear passage in either side of 70 feet.

The bridge was three years in building.

When completed, recently, it was loaded with cars, carts and engines of a total dead weight of 400 pounds to the square yard. After these had remained at rest 24 hours, the whole train was rushed across at speed, making a deflection hardly perceptible.

A TEXAS CLERGYMAN

Speaks Out for the Benefit of Suffering Thousands.



Rev. G. M. Gray, Baptist Clergyman, of Whitesboro, Tex., says: "Four years ago I suffered misery with lumbago. Every movement was one of pain. Doan's Kidney Pills removed the whole difficulty after only a short time. Although I do not like to have my name used publicly, I make an exception in this case, so that other sufferers from kidney trouble may profit by my experience."

THREE CURES OF ECZEMA.

Woman Tells of Her Brother's Terrible Suffering—Two Babies Also Cured—Cuticura Invaluable.

"My brother had eczema three different summers. Each summer it came out between his shoulders and down his back and he said his suffering was terrible. When it came on the third summer, he bought a box of Cuticura Ointment and gave it a faithful trial. Soon he began to feel better and he cured himself entirely of eczema with Cuticura. A lady in Indiana heard of how my daughter, Mrs. Miller, had cured her little son of terrible eczema by the Cuticura Remedies. This lady's little one had the eczema so badly that they thought they would lose it. She used Cuticura Remedies and they cured her child entirely, and the disease never came back. Mrs. Sarah E. HOUSE WORK

In order to keep the home neat and pretty, the children well dressed and tidy, women overdo. A female weakness or displacement is often brought on and they suffer in silence, drifting along from bad to worse, knowing well that they ought to have help to overcome the pains and aches which daily make life a burden.

It is to these faithful women that comes as a boon and a blessing, as it did to Mrs. F. Ellsworth, of Mayville, N. Y., and to Mrs. W. P. Boyd, of Beaver Falls, Pa., who say:

"I was not able to do my own work, owing to the female trouble from which I suffered. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound helped me wonderfully, and I am so well that I can do as big a day's work as I ever did. I wish every sick woman would try it."

FACTS FOR SICK WOMEN.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has positively cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration. Why don't you try it?

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health. Address, Lynn, Mass.

Sultan to Decapitate His Court Astrologer

By WILLARD W. GARRISON

Soothsayer Gets In Bad with the Stars and Is Now in Jail

Wise Sage Will Offer Up His Head as New Year's Gift to Turkey's Highest Potentate—Recital of the Country's Trials and Tribulations—Some High Officials Flee—Others Are Jailed Before They Can Escape—How His Majesty Feels About the Regal Distress.

"Power Behind the Throne" Gone and the Monarch Is Compelled to Dictate His Own "Copy"—Cheering of the Multitude Outside the Royal Palace Greatly Disturbs the Ruler—Granting of Constitution of 1876 Is Great Victory for Young Turks Party—Other Events in Revolution of Form of Government.

EX-COURT ASTROLOGER ABDUL HUDA'S New Year's offering to the sultan of Turkey will be the former's head.

This is the latest bit of wireless news from the imperial palace at Constantinople, and it is vouched for by Lord High Guardian of His Majesty's Wearing Apparel Mafid Mohammed, who whispered the words across the plaza to a tall blonde lady who was interested in stars before they thrust Huda into jail.

It all came about in this manner:

At a recent star chamber session between his majesty and the court astrologer, Huda informed the sultan that as far as he could discern by daylight the orbs of the universe were in their correct positions, thus lending security to the monarch.

A few days later the Young Turks started revolution.

A few days after that the sultan was compelled to proclaim that the equal-rights constitution of 1876 would again be in force. This he did with one eye pinned upon the threat that the empire would be disrupted by the malcontents.

ABDUL HUDA.

Then he fired the cabinet.

And appointed a new one.

Each day as his majesty smoked his long pipe, dismissed these disturbances by a new shifting motion, the impression began to gain strength with him that all was not serene.

The use of the word serene in his thoughts immediately recalled the star predictions of Abdul Huda, but then no better star-gazer was to be found in the empire, for had not the imperial guardian of the Turkish empire tested him many times and found that Abdul's predictions were always true? He had.

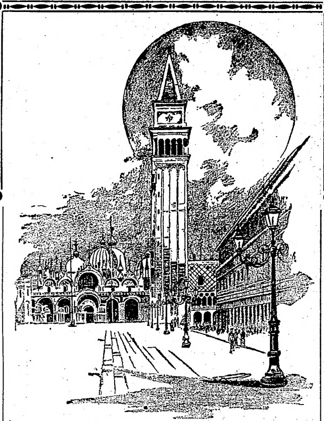
Then mentally the sultan went over what his astrologer had told him only the Friday previous.

Mars, the star which portended for war, was gradually fading away, and Huda had also said that within a few weeks there would probably be no Mars.

The big dipper, suggestive of the horn of plenty, was brighter than ever. It was true, for had not Huda in all his wise raving said it?

Mercury, the swift one, whose existence was a memory of work, was soon to go into a perpetual total eclipse, so had Abdul said.

Huda's inside reasoning had also depicted the eventual union between Jupiter and Venus, which, of course, augured well for friends of the sultan.



PALACE OF THE SULTAN IN CONSTANTINOPLE.

Surely, then, there was no cause for trouble, the ruler soliloquized to himself. He paused and pondered and then lit up with a new kind of tobacco.

Fifteen minutes elapsed.

"Ha, I see it all," he whispered to the royal fox terrier. "Huda's in bad with the stars."

Then in a loud voice:

"Corporal of the imperial guard, front!"

In came the trusty band, weapons in hand.

Within a few minutes, Huda, his trunk packed for his vacation, was ushered into the regal presence, well knowing that the signs had been switched under his eyes.

"Off with his head!" shouted the sultan, rising from the divan.

Fifteen brown forearms pulled 15 shining sabers and were ready to deliver the fatal stroke with the same regularity that governs up-to-date melodrama.

"Stay, slaves," quoth his highness, "I would fain give him a worse punishment before I am ready to deprive him of what little gray matter there may be beneath that bald pate. To the dungeon with him."

The day's routine over, the sultan re-seated himself upon the divan and thought of what had best be done. Finally he decided that there could be no place just like jail as a punishment, and so Huda remained there.

However, the story goes, the former student of the stars will offer up his head on New Year's day as his sacrifice for getting into the evil graces of the stars.

Previously everything had looked splendid to the monarch. The Young Turks had not objected to his harem until Huda got in bad with the planets and many of that party had promised to leave the country rather than be called to purgatory by decapitation.

As each step in this fearful condition of things came to his mind his royal highness decided that it looked darker for Abdul Huda's head and also rather dark for Abdul Second's safety, the latter being the sultan himself.

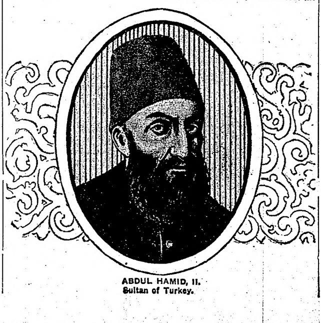
There was no one else to blame it on except the astrologer. Had not his plea of sickness when other nations pressed him for the return of their loans, always been sufficient to quell them? It had, and he could see no other reason for the status than by returning to his original reason.

If things went wrong in this manner Huda must have been in league with the palace camarilla.

A double tap at a secret bell, an order shouted down the speaking tube and the officials of the palace camarilla were pinched.

This retinue included Riza Pasha, the former minister of war, and Raghib Pasha, one of the justly exalted and highly honored court chamberlains. Because he considered the dignity of his position Raghib barricaded himself within his cyclone cellar a few plazas from the royal mansion and prepared to sell his life as dearly as possible. He opened fire on the police, but his ammunition soon gave out and the minions of the law escorted him into the royal presence, who meted out 30 days and costs in the royal dungeon.

Because the court soothsayer's report had been doctored, the sultan set about to corral the entire body of hangers-on, who daily loafed about the court. This done he issued notice that parliament, representing the people, would be held in the fall.



ABDUL HAMID, II.
Sultan of Turkey.

He had to issue the notice himself, for the former power behind the throne—Achmed Izzet Pasha, his secretary—smelling the trouble by a far better method than that which the astrologer possessed, skipped the country and a few days later was reported in the United States.

Then in view of the new order of things within his realm, Abdul II decided to call home his ambassadors at foreign capitals. Hence not long ago we read in press dispatches that Mehmed Ali Bey had been recalled from Washington and a successor appointed. The Turk recalled from the national capital is no other than the father of the missing secretary, and as a consequence it was expected that the pair would connive together as to the best mode of procedure in the present case, for both might be made a part of the consignment of corpses which the sultan had billed for the morgue on New Year's day.

Thus by the foregoing will be seen that things are in a bad way in Turkey, and despite the fact that they cheer the sultan outside of the palace until he has to empty the court water pitcher upon them so that he may sleep in peace, many of the tall Turkish minds have announced that they "are going away from here, never again to return."

IZZETT PASHA.

And the cause of all this trouble, according to those who sympathize with his majesty, is none other than Huda himself.

Therefore he is pining away the idle hours in the jail's solitary confinement pen, playing solitaire with the covers from Turkish cigarette boxes, which the guard shoves toward him with his manna and water twice a day. The only solace which he had on first entering the jail was that within two months he would have a full pack of cards for they furnished him a box of cigarettes with each meal. That is, his friends did. For they provide his luxuries, while the actual bodily necessities are given by the ruler himself.

However, let it be said that the astrologer does not know of his fate, and he probably will not until the time comes for him to be led out to sacrifice his star-filled cranium to the art which he has studied throughout his 49 years.

As Turks go he is a young man still and being unmarried there probably will be few who mourn him. His only acquaintances were court officials, and they had little love for him for the reason that he would at every opportunity take their predictions from their mouths and turning them into magic Turkish words return them to the sultan as sayings from the Zodiac.

CAPT. T. S. BALDWIN

HAS MADE PROBLEM OF AERIAL NAVIGATION LIFE STUDY.

Dirigible Balloon Recently Completed for Government Signal Corps Product of 30 Years' Labor—Began Experiments Early.

Washington.—Capt. Thomas Scott Baldwin, dean of aeronautics in this country, has devoted his life to the problem of aerial navigation. Capt. Baldwin's name is inseparably linked with aeronautic activities the world over. In nearly every civilized country of the world Capt. Baldwin has given exhibitions with his parachutes, balloons and airships. With constantly applied persistency to make a success of ballooning, Capt. Baldwin has not relinquished his interest for a single day for 30 years. During this long experience, he has made and given more than 3,000 exhibitions and flights in the air. Unlike those who have made failures of their airship experiences, Capt. Baldwin is essentially a student. His workshop does not present the appearance of a collection of ideas, plainly marked theories. He has always worked along the practical and scientific lines. To these he owes his success, although kind fate appears always to have smiled upon him. He has taken chances in making his experiments in the air that would still with fear the heart of a man of less courage than himself.

"Apprehension of trouble is far worse than the trouble itself when it arrives," said Capt. Baldwin. "I learned this early, and I never borrow trouble. I never feel the least bit of fear. I always have figured out the thing I meant to do before doing it, and felt reasonably sure that I could accomplish it before making the attempt."

Capt. T. S. Baldwin.

Interest in aeronautics has been intensified since the government began to take an interest. The recent tests of Capt. Baldwin's big dirigible balloon, which he built for the signal corps of the United States army, were followed with a keen interest all over the ballooning world. In addition to this he has built for the government two spherical balloons.

Following the old adage that a shoemaker should stick to his last, Capt. Baldwin never wavered for a moment in his intention to master the air for transportation facilities.

When still a mere youngster he began his experiments at San Francisco. Up to this time there had never been a successful parachute jump. It had been nearly 50 years previous to Baldwin's attempt that the last man to try the experiment had met his death. But after considerable experimenting and thought given to the idea, Baldwin was determined to make a jump of 1,000 feet from the balloon. That was 21 years ago. Baldwin announced his intention and thousands of people gathered at Golden Gate park and cheered as the plucky young man made the first successful parachute jump on record. This was the beginning of his long record of successes twice around the world. And in all these daring chances he took Capt. Baldwin has never suffered the slightest injury.

This dean of American aeronautics his given exhibitions before the nobility and many of the crowned heads of Europe. Also in Australia, China, Japan and Egypt. Everywhere he went, with his series of successes following him, he gave encouragement to those who were working along the same lines that he had spent so many years on.

The one sad event in Capt. Baldwin's experience was the loss of his perfectly equipped workshop during the San Francisco disaster. Thousands of dollars had been spent on the best tools, the finest materials and half-finished airships, which represented years of experiments and also the best of his knowledge gleaned from his work in his all-around the world trips. This was the greatest defeat he had ever met with and it prostrated many of his ambitious plans for a time.

Capt. Baldwin has studied the air currents as a mariner has studied the sea. None of his successes or his discoveries has come by chance, but by patient and long, hard work in experimenting and studying out the foundation for what once seemed the unattainable. No matter how successful a new ship, rigged with all his latest and best ideas, may be on her early trips, Capt. Baldwin is never satisfied to stop with that.

A SIMPLE SAFEGUARD IN BUYING PAINT.

Everybody should know how simple and easy it is to avoid all uncertainty in buying paint materials. There are many so-called white leads on the market, which contain chalk, zinc, barytes, and other cheap adulterants. Unless the property owner takes advantage of the simple means of protection afforded him by reliable white lead manufacturers, he runs great risk of getting an inferior and adulterated white lead.

It is to protect the paint-buyer against fraud and adulteration that National Lead Company, the largest makers of genuine Pure White Lead, place their famous "Dutch Boy Painter" trademark on every keg of their product, an absolute guarantee of its purity and quality. Anyone who wants to make a practical test of white lead, and who wants a valuable free book about painting, should address National Lead Company, Woodbridge Bldg., New York, and ask for test equipment.

Critical Eye for Babies.

The five-year-old daughter of a Brooklyn man has had such a large experience of dolls that she feels herself to be something of a connoisseur in children.

Recently there came a real live baby into the house.

"Isn't it a nice baby?" asked the nurse.

"Yes, it's nice," answered the youngster hesitatingly. "It's nice, but its head's loose."—Lippincott's.

Peonies as a Medicine.

Peonies were originally esteemed less for beauty of bloom than for value as a medicine. In recognition of its curative virtues, the peony was named after Paeon, the physician of the gods. An old writer says: "About an infant's neck hang peonie. It cures Alcydes cruell maladie." Nor did the use of the plant stop there, for peony water was esteemed and drank in bygone times, though whether as medicine or merely as a refreshing temperance beverage is more than modern writers can say.

Boy Grades the Clergy.

Bishop Potter, at an ecclesiastical dinner in New York, read a Cooperstown schoolboy's essay on "Clergymen." The essay, which created much amusement, was as follows:

"There are 2 kinds of clergymen Bishups recters and curats. the bishups tells the recters to work and the curats have to do it. A curat is a thin married man but when he is a recter he gets fuller and can preach longer sermons and becums a good man."—Washington Star.

MOTHER AND CHILD

Both Fully Nourished on Grape-Nuts.

The value of this famous food is shown in many ways, in addition to what might be expected from its chemical analysis.

Grape-Nuts food is made of whole wheat and barley, is thoroughly baked for many hours and contains all the wholesome ingredients in these cereals.

It contains also the phosphate of potash grown in the grains, which Nature uses to build up brain and nerve cells.

Young children require proportionately more of this element because the brain and nervous system of the child grows so rapidly.

A Va. mother found the value of Grape-Nuts in not only building up her own strength but in nourishing her baby at the same time. She writes:

"After my baby came I did not recover health and strength, and the doctor said I could not nurse the baby as I did not have nourishment for her, besides I was too weak.

"He said I might try a change of diet and see what that would do, and recommended Grape-Nuts food. I bought a pkg. and used it regularly. A marked change came over both baby and I.

"My baby is now four months old, is in fine condition, I am nursing her and doing all my work and never felt better in my life." "There's a Reason."

The Human Engine.

Of all the engines cunningly devised by man not one can equal that masterpiece of construction, the engine of the human frame. To run that engine, air is the first necessity. Construct it how you will, the greater part of the energy which feeds a power plant is lost before it reaches the applying machine. The body, declares Hollis Godfrey in the Atlantic, only has the power of using energy really economically and efficiently. Its food is its fuel. To be available, all the constituents of that food must be burned, producing heat and power. For that burning the oxygen of the air is essential. Equally true is it that nitrogen must be present to prevent the rapid combustion which would take place in oxygen alone. But whether the combustion be fast or slow, the action is the same. The body burns the carbon and hydrogen of its food and gives out the oxides of these substances, carbon dioxide (carbon acid gas) and hydrogen oxide (water). The water that is formed within the body by the burning of hydrogen is of comparatively slight importance in a consideration of the vital questions of the effect of city air upon the individual, but the other factor, the carbon dioxide formed in the body, is of direct importance.

Rear Admiral Sigsbee, in a recent article in the Youths' Companion, referred to a story told him by an officer who had sailed on the Portsmouth off the African coast, hunting for slavers. The story goes that the Portsmouth was once challenged to race by a foreign man-of-war, and sailed round the foreigner twice. The admiral regards this as a good sea yarn which he is content to leave undisturbed. A correspondent who was on board the Portsmouth at the time writes to the Companion that in the log which he kept of the cruise he finds the facts which bear out the story. On November 12, 1859, the Archer, British sloop of war, and the Portsmouth were lying at anchor off Kensington, West Africa. Both got under way about the same time, all sails set, and started on a trial of speed. Whether the race had been planned or was an informal "brush" is not recorded, but it is true that in the race that folowed the Portsmouth sailed clean round the Archer. The evident embellishment of the incident to make it a worthy sea yarn is the word "twice."

Here is a new sort of infant prodigy. A little girl of five years, the daughter of respectable working people in one of the most populous quarters of Paris, seems to have established a record in juvenile crime. Some time ago she tried to cut out her little brother's tongue with a knife. She has tried to burn the house down, having taken care to soak beds and furniture with petroleum. Such a terror did she become in the neighborhood that she was commonly called the "baby devil." The public institutions, where she was sent, considered her an abnormality and refused to keep her. She has tried to stab a man. Her performances so disturbed the neighbors that her unfortunate parents were ordered from their poor lodgings by a bailiff. Now the authorities have taken charge of this terrible little creature, who seems to be the kind of degenerate recently described by Prof. Lombroso, an inheritor of the sins of many forbears.

Denial of the probability of a war between Japan and the United States would be gratuitous if there were not so much persistent talk about the dreadful possibility. It may be worth while to collect three recent utterances on the subject by persons who know. A French officer who has been in Japan making a dispassionate study of military matters, says, in effect, that Japan is physically incapable of war with the United States. The American ambassador to Japan, Mr. O'Brien, says that war talk is absurd. Marquis Katsura, the new head of the Japanese cabinet, supports his assertion that Japan is bent on peace by pointing out that the financial problem of Japan is sufficient to engross her for some time to come. War between this country and Japan is possible; so is war between any two nations. But it is a perverse jingoism which tries to frighten folk with so nebulous a possibility.

Sone one has discovered that it is very foolish to become angry, as every time a person loses his temper his supply of vitality is lowered. This is doubtless very true, but there are few who will stop to remember it when there is the temptation to get mad.

Some people predict that the dirigible balloons will be made useful in smuggling goods past customs borders. Possibly, when a 400-foot gasbag can be made so invisible that customs officials cannot see it.

Racial Drama In Politics

Foreign Born Run Most Big Cities by Their Votes.

By Ernest McGaffey

American Is, as a Rule, a Stay-at-Home on Election Day. His "Holler", However, Is Long and Loud When Sin Finds Him Out.

EVERY large city of mixed nationality offers a rare opportunity for studying what may be well termed "racial politics." To an outsider, the facts are of course not apparent enough to make it interesting, but to a man on the "inside" the drama is chock-full of interest. As I had, and have, no sort of prejudice against any race or creed, my experience in municipal politics was as good as an extended course of travel in foreign countries. I saw the various outs and ins of politics unfold themselves, viewing matters with a strictly impartial eye. There was nothing in the life of the city that was not in some way, either remote or imminent, connected with the political game. A man might stay at home and abjure politics if he wished to, and most of the native Americans did this, but his sin would find him out. Then, when he made his roar of protest against existing conditions, he had no one but himself to blame.

The ward I lived in was, for our city, singularly free from an admixture of races. There were quite a number of Germans, a large array of Swedes, Norwegians and Danes, some Irish and Irish-Americans, a strong colony of Poles, a few English and Welsh, some Bohemians, and a scattering of Greeks, Arabians, Jews, Armenians, Italians, Spanish, Chinese, Finns, Scotch, Russians and some Americans, with an occasional Patagonian or a native of the Cannibal Islands. But it was not one of those wards of the city where all races under the sun were represented; and a few besides.

By and large the Irish-Americans "ran" the ward. That is, in our party. It was the simplest thing in the world. They were born politicians, taking to politics as a duck does to water, and having a real love for the game. They were ready speakers, and sometimes good ones; they were invincible "hustlers;" they always attended the ward meetings, and usually held the offices; they were active in getting acquainted, liberal in their pursuit of their natural prey—the other races—and resourceful. They were not too scrupulous in attaining a desired end, and they never lost heart in defeat. They could and did rejoice in a victory, but they were never cast down when they lost. It's all well enough to talk about the alleged volatility of the Irish race, but they make good soldiers, don't they? Well, there's a deal of discipline and other military ingredients in political life, and while it is true that in the rural districts the American comes out strong for politics, in the majority of the cities, big and little, the Irish-American politicians "run things." If you don't believe this, travel a little and inquire.

But "politics is such disagreeable work, don't you know." Of course, "don't you know." But the result of letting politics go hang while one keeps his nose stuck tenaciously to the grindstone of business often results in disaster to the entire community "doncherknow." And I for one, had nothing but bitter contempt for the people of my race who lifted protesting hands and gave voice to the "lily-livered" dictum that "politics was something a gentleman couldn't engage in."

But speaking of "Americans," so far as the cities are concerned, where are they?

"English and Irish, Dutch and Danish,
German, Italian, French and Spanish,
Crossing their veins until they vanish,
In one conglomeration:
So subtle a tangle of blood indeed
No Heraldry-Harvey could ever succeed
In finding the circulation."

You can find regulation Americans down in Kentucky, for instance, men who can trace their ancestors clear down to Daniel Boone in an unbroken line. You may find them indulging in such pleasantries as burning tobacco warehouses or shooting at each other from behind rail fences, for they are quite as handy with a rifle as Daniel was.

The Poles were a clannish nation, and no one else could do anything in their wards. Where they represented only a smattering of strength they could be handled fairly well by the "leaders" in the ward, but they were "live members" and wanted some share in the "spoils" of office.

The Bohemians were also a combatively inclined people, politically, and waged lively campaigns in the wards where they held the balance of the voting power. But they did not have the cohesiveness of the Poles, and candidates of other nationalities could occasionally squeeze in. The Bohemian, and in fact all of the foreign-populated wards, were strong for personal liberty, and as near as possible for the social privileges they had enjoyed in Europe, minus any intrusion of "the king business." The Scandinavian voters were apathetic mostly, only once in awhile producing an orator or a hustling politician. They were governed in their political judgments partly by party fealty, partly by the question of personal fitness, and somewhat by the question of nationality. But I give them credit for not being carried away entirely by either pride of race or demand of party. They really wanted good men; and the fact that a man was one of their race did not invariably get him their vote. Occasionally they nominated a man of their race for the express purpose of defeating him, because he had proved himself too small for the position.

The Germans were good, live politicians, and like as in other matters, somewhat Teutonic in their prejudices and tendencies. Clannish was hardly the word for their particular brand of political cohesion. Out of the ruck of many a particular defeat would emerge triumphant the form of some German candidate whose race vote had been plumped solidly for him, no matter what party he belonged to. To nominate a state, county or city ticket without the name of at least one representative German for one of the principal offices, was something that no party convention either cared or dared to do. A good many of the Germans still spoke the language of the Fatherland, and even when there were spies about, seeking to pick up crumbs of information, they were usually baffled by "the vernacular." The Germans had good, solid, and eloquent speakers among them, and they were excellent campaigners.

Their particular wards elected German aldermen as a rule, and as a rule the German office-holders were good men. Occasionally they were amusingly independent when given appointive offices. To go against a mayor's wishes when placed in an appointive position is as much worse than lese majeste as murder is more of a crime than petty larceny. Yet on occasions the sturdy independence of the Teutonic mind boiled over. An alderman called on a German official with a request from a mayor (not in my time) to do something the official disapproved of. The official took the message with an expressive shrug of the shoulders. "I won't do it," was his answer. "But I've got the mayor's orders," replied the surprised and indignant city father. "I don't care what you've got," was the retort. "You ain't got me, Hein. I run this office. I've got my resignation written and in my pocket. The mayor can have this office in ten minutes if he wants it, but he can't have me." So the alderman had to give it up, and the official remained.

The Hebrew wards were inclined to a man of their own race, but they were not massed excepting in about three wards. They are not, strictly speaking, a people who "go in" very strongly for politics, but they make a success of it when they do engage in it deliberately. The scattering vote of this nationality was large, but divided among so many wards that it was a matter of uncertainty as to number. But where they had taken up residence almost solidly, as in certain wards, they ran things themselves. When they engaged actively in politics they developed good speakers. They were, as a rule, rather inclined to one of the ruling parties, but the fetish of party could not compel their votes to be cast irrespective of men and principle.

Now the striking dissimilarity of so many races, and their segregations of one another in different parts of the city, produced a curious state of affairs from a social standpoint. Here was a race from the south of Europe, eager, bustling, emotional, with its own particular customs and mode of life. There, three blocks away, might be a race from northern Europe, totally unlike them, with creeds, schools, ways of living and every conceivable viewpoint, both mental and physical, absolutely separated from their neighbors.

Shooting at Each Other from Behind Rail Fences.

What was the result? Why, it was like a lot of block-houses, each with its hostile or semi-hostile occupants. Dwellers in the same city? I say no! Dwellers in the same community, I grant, but so carved apart by nationality and environment as to compose foreign settlements.

Why did Rome from her seven hills rule the world? What makes Paris such a great city? What gives the distinctive touch to London, Berlin, Dublin, Edinburgh? It is the sense of homogeneity that makes them as they are; the feeling among their inhabitants of a common interest, a uniformity of racial feeling and instinct, and kindred aims and aspirations. You tell me of a great city that has 40 or 50 different nationalities dragging away in different directions? Not in a thousand years! Yet the reformers and dreamers, seeing no further than beyond their own noses, attempt to weld into a homogeneous mass, in a few years, what time intends to devote centuries into doing.

A slight study of racial politics will convince the most enthusiastic believer in "having things his own way," that it "can't be did" in some cities. Racial prejudice, old-world customs, religion, suspicion, temperament, how many—and how impregnable are the barriers which present themselves. To get along without any trouble with the representatives of all these different nationalities was not a hard task, provided you looked at mankind as being all lineal descendants of Adam, and not different in what they wanted, but only different in the way they went at it. The sanguine races gesticulated, grew eloquent, rapt, even poetical in asking for some small favor. The taciturn races expressed themselves briefly, and devoid of enthusiasm.

Racial politics concerned itself carefully as to the selection of the various ward halls in which to hold the meetings, the hiring of bands, the employment of printers, the distribution of "ward patronage" and all the intricacies of municipal politics. "What's in a name?" Well, you can bet your ultimate sesterce that there was nearly everything in a name when it came to sorting out the petty jobs in a ward. Why, an astute ward superintendent (supposing he were an Irish-American) would "turn down" with cold disdain the request to put on another man of his nationality on a job, if there already had been sufficient representation of the race on the job. It made a heap of difference what a man's name began or ended with in municipal politics.

JOHN SMITH

MAYOR

Sorting Out Petty Jobs.

Of course everyone cannot be satisfied, but favors must be distributed as near evenly as possible to keep a ward organization or a party "machine" in good running order. And weren't these "handy boys" on the lookout to see that there was no undue favoritism practiced? I should say. And they could tell you just how things stood in the ward, and they were "johnny-on-the-spot" if any "coarse work" was attempted.

When an approaching election was coming on the leaders of the party, of as many races as there were colors in Joseph's coat, would assemble to consider the personnel of the ticket. Not that I ever heard them use the word personnel. These meetings might take place in a hotel, or party headquarters, or if it was a straight ward meeting of leaders in the ward, it might take place in a, say, schoolhouse.

Then and there the various qualifications of the different prospective candidates would be discussed and argued, and "a slate," as it is called, would be agreed upon. Sometimes these "slates" went through on convention day without a slip. Sometimes there were battles in the convention, and compromises effected.

I was present at one of these "caucuses" of leaders, when there was merely talk about the prospective ticket, but no settlement of the ticket. It was an informal gathering, accidental, but an earnest meeting nevertheless. The main office was spoken of. A prominent German-American was suggested. He was approved by all present. Another office was named. It was assigned to a well-known Irish-American. A third office came up. After a little wrangling a popular Scandinavian was selected. A fourth office was mentioned. An influential Pole was the favorite. A fifth office became the topic of conversation and the name of a Bohemian citizen was proposed and a Hebrew who had been active in the party. Finally during the wrangle an Irish-American politician said heatedly: "Well, what's the matter with giving it to a good American? I know just the man, and he's a corker." The leader of the group looked at him disgustedly and said: "Do you mean that?" "Sure, I mean it," was the reply. The leader laid his heavy hand down with a quiet force that made the glasses tilt as he said: "This is business, see! I want it distinctly understood that I'm in favor of no d——d experiments." That settled it.

INDUSTRY'S TERRIBLE DEATH ROLL

By WILLARD W. GARRISON

Peace, 2; War, 1; Is Score in Fearful Carnage

In the United States Loss of Life Is Almost Beyond Mind's Power of Conception—How the World Figures Line-up with Those of This Country.

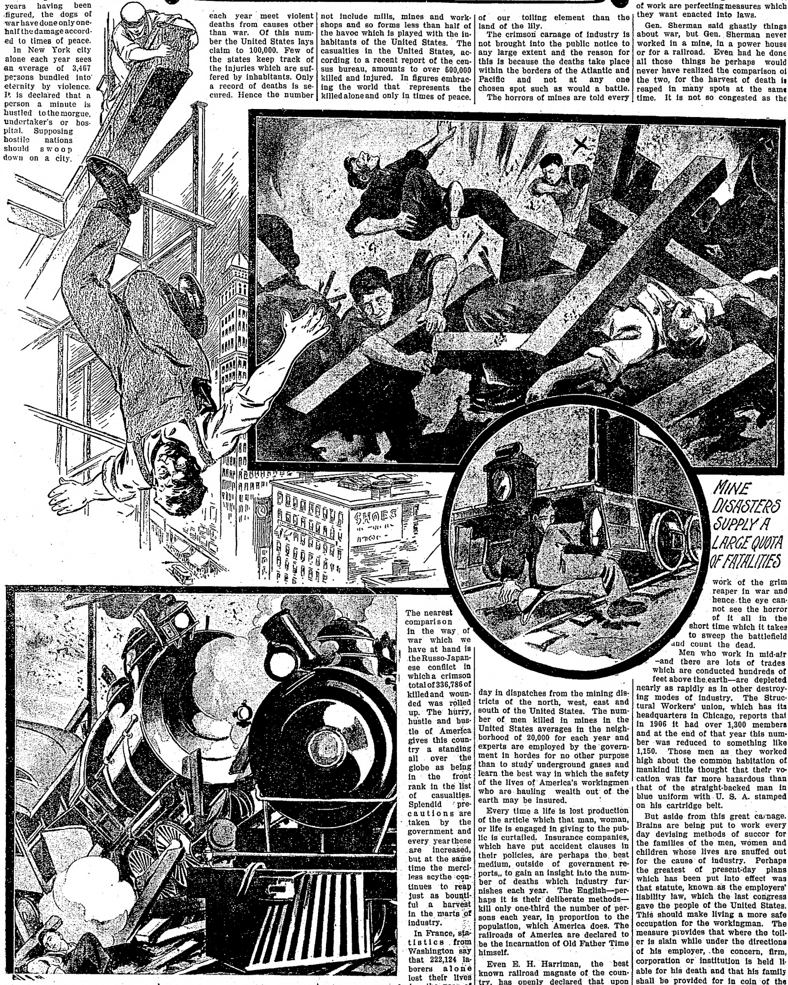
OLD FATHER TIME in depleting the population of this planet to make room for coming generations is using two great scythes—war and industry. He wields the latter with his right hand and the former with his left, consequently the carnage of the battlefield is outstripped by the number of lives snuffed out by railroads, mines, mills, workshops, etc. The actual ratio is two to one in favor of peace.

By that statement is meant that, the average deaths each year for 20 years having been figured, the dogs of war have done only one-half the damage accorded to times of peace.

In New York city alone each year sees an average of 3,467 persons bundled into eternity by violence. It is declared that a person a minute is hustled to the morgue, undertaker's or hospital. Supposing hostile nations should swoop down on a city perhaps a little larger than Des Moines, Ia., and should massacre every single human being within its limits; then we would have a fair example of the number of souls who perish in a year in the United States from violent causes.

Civilized nations record that 500,000 each year meet violent deaths from causes other than war. Of this number the United States lays claim to 100,000. Few of the states keep track of the injuries which are suffered by inhabitants. Only a record of deaths is secured. Hence the number of actual casualties can never be known, but the government furnishes us with reports of the killed.

Just recently the interstate commerce commission made public its report for the year 1907. Its report places the killed and injured upon railroads alone at 122,855. This does not include mills, mines and workshops and so forms less than half of the havoc which is played with the inhabitants of the United States. The casualties in the United States, according to a recent report of the census bureau, amounts to over 500,000 killed and injured. In figures embracing the world that represents the killed alone and only in times of peace.



MINE DISASTERS SUPPLY A LARGE QUOTA OF FATALITIES

The nearest comparison in the way of war which we have at hand is the Russo-Japanese conflict in which a crimson total of 336,786 of killed and wounded was rolled up. The hurry, hustle and bustle of America gives this country a standing all over the globe as being in the front rank in the list of casualties. Splendid precautions are taken by the government and every year these are increased, but at the same time the merciless scythe continues to reap just as bountiful a harvest in the marts of industry.

In France, statistics from Washington say that 222,124 laborers alone lost their lives and were injured during the year of 1905, which unfortunately was rather a taller reckoning than those of preceding years. Of course America's population is about twice that of France and as a consequence, perhaps, are more heedful in the care of the lives of our toiling element than the land of the lily.

The crimson carnage of industry is not brought into the public notice to any large extent and the reason for this is because the deaths take place within the borders of the Atlantic and Pacific and not at any one chosen spot such as would a battle.

The horrors of mines are told every day in dispatches from the mining districts of the north, west, east and south of the United States. The number of men killed in mines in the United States averages in the neighborhood of 20,000 for each year and experts are employed by the government in hordes for no other purpose than to study underground gases and learn the best way in which the safety of the lives of America's workingmen who are hauling wealth out of the earth may be insured.

Every time a life is lost production of the article which that man, woman, or life is engaged in giving to the public is curtailed. Insurance companies, which have put accident clauses in their policies, are perhaps the best medium, outside of government reports,, to gain an insight into the number of deaths which industry furnishes each year. The English—perhaps it is their deliberate methods—kill only one-third the number of persons each year, in proportion to the population, which America does. The railroads of America are declared to be the incarnation of Old Father Time himself.

Even E. H. Harriman, the best known railroad magnate of the country, has openly declared that upon going on journeys over his own roads, he wonders whether it is to be his last journey. And arriving at the cause of this depletion of the population on railroads, it is found that the results are brought about by the absolute demand of the American for more speed. "Faster, faster," cries the business man and the same is true of people in every walk of life.

We are willing to take a chance on a dangerous machine because it accomplishes work quicker and we toss the thoughts of probable fatalities to one side. The proportion of workshop accidents attributed to persons being caught in the machinery is 30 per cent., and to-day men who are toiling for the benefit of the man who derives his living from that sort of work are perfecting measures which they want enacted into laws.

Gen. Sherman said ghastly things about war, but Gen. Sherman never worked in a mine, in a power house or for a railroad. Even had he done all those things he perhaps would never have realized the comparison of the two, for the harvest of death is reaped in many spots at the same time. It is not so congested as the work of the grim reaper in war and hence the eye cannot see the horror of it all in the short time which it takes to sweep the battlefield and count the dead.

Men who work in mid-air—and there are lots of trades which are conducted hundreds of feet above the earth—are depleted nearly as rapidly as in other destroying modes of industry. The Structural Workers' union, which has its headquarters in Chicago, reports that in 1906 it had over 1,300 members and at the end of that year this number was reduced to something like 1,150. Those men as they worked high about the common habitation of mankind little thought that their vocation was far more hazardous than that of the straight-backed man in blue uniform with U. S. A. stamped on his cartridge belt.

But aside from this great carnage. Brains are being put to work every day devising methods of succor for the families of the men, women and children whose lives are snuffed out for the cause of industry. Perhaps the greatest of present-day plans which has been put into effect was that statute, known as the employers' liability law, which the last congress gave the people of the United States. This should make living a more safe occupation for the workingman. The measure provides that where the toiler is slain while under the directions of his employer, the concern, firm, corporation or institution is held liable for his death and that his family shall be provided for in coin of the realm. A man's carelessness or irresponsible condition at the time of the accident, of course, debars his widow and fatherless children from the benefits which they might have reaped had the case been otherwise.

THE MAN WHO DID THINGS TWICE

By DON MARK LEMON

(Copyright, by Shortstory Pub. Co.)

Of commanding figure and soldierly bearing, with deep-set eyes, hollow, cadaverous cheeks, and mustache and hair an intense blue black, his singular personality alone had anywhere and at all times attracted special attention to the man; but coupled with this distinguished personality, and singling him out as remarkable in the highest degree, was the fact that he lived in duplicate.

Thus—if on Monday he arose early, breakfasted on coffee, toast and eggs, afterwards retired to his rooms to occupy himself until noon at his desk; then, after partaking of lunch, quit his rooms to ramble about the city, giving alms to the old blind organ woman, going up and down particular streets and through particular quarters, thence back to his hotel, to his dinner, to his desk after dinner, and finally to bed—on Tuesday he would go through precisely the same regime.

On Wednesday he perhaps would spend the day quite differently, arising late, going out on horseback for the entire day, attending the theater at night, and to bed at midnight or later; but howsoever he spent Wednesday, Thursday—or the day following—was sure to be a repetition down to the smallest detail.

Friday would see commenced a new series of action for Saturday to duplicate.

He was the echo—as it were—of himself, and a consummate echo at that, for time and time again he had been watched to see whether he would not make some mistake or fail in his series of duplication, but whenever it was possible for an act to be duplicated he never had been known to fail in its duplication; and, indeed, he had grown so shrewd in the matter that he never did on one day what could not reasonably be duplicated upon the next—if that succeeding day was to be a duplication of the preceding one, and not the beginning of a new series of action.

'Living his own life in his own reserved way, cultured and studious, troubling no one, offending none; doubly liberal in his expenditures and never pressed for means, steadfast in his chosen eccentricity—if such it were—and in his face and manner no questioning doubt of himself, perhaps in time Henry Hobart had been accepted like any other man, the curious had ceased to be curious, and his mysterious character, without any further or deeper scrutiny, had become one of the mysteries of human life, had not the man been suddenly struck down as by an invisible hand and the appalling mystery of his death heightened tenfold the mystery of his life.

On a Tuesday morning, at 15 minutes of ten o'clock, an attendant was summoned by the call-bell to room 63 of the Sumner house, and upon obeying the call found Henry Hobart struggling in the throes of a strange and unnatural death.

The Man Who Did Things Twice, half dressed, standing in the center of his outer room, was battling with the invisible air about him for breath, or, as the attendant put it later, "Like he was fightin' with something that weren't there."

The hotel was aroused, Dr. Thiel was hastily summoned from his office on the next floor, and everything was done that science could suggest or despair persuade, yet in less than ten minutes Henry Hobart lay dead on the floor, within his stilled brain hidden the profound mystery of his life, and still echoing in the death room his one strangled cry ere death sealed his blue lips—"To-morrow!"

It was a strange case, a questionable case, a frightful case, but beyond all it proved a baffling case, for the police came, removed the body to the morgue, intimating death by poison or other foul play, and examined the rooms and overhauled the possessions of the dead man, but who the deceased was, who his kindred or what his former residence, or the cause of his death, they could not discover. The scholarly tomes that filled his shelves bore no signatures or bookmarks, and private papers of any kind there were none. The autopsy made the same day—afternoon—upon the body of the deceased failed to discover any poison, and Dr. Thiel's belief that the man had been strangled seemed without support, as no foreign substance or growth of any kind was found in the windpipe or air passages.

One thing only seemed certain, one thing only was undisputed—The Man Who Did Things Twice, with severed windpipe and autopsy-marred body, would not duplicate his own death upon the morrow. He had come to his death on a Tuesday, a Tuesday with which—had he lived—he would have begun a new course of action to be duplicated on Wednesday. But he had died, and now for once The Man Who Did Things Twice would fail in his eccentricity. Perhaps for that his spirit would be troubled.

Next morning, while the attendant who had been first on the death scene of the previous day was holding forth at length on the tragedy with certain servant-cronies, the call-bell suddenly rang and the hand of the call dial spin around and pointed to number 63.

The man hastened to obey the summons, not noticing that the hands of the hall clock pointed to 15 minutes of ten, nor delaying to recollect what guest occupied room 63. The tragedy of the preceding day had been the event of his life, and he had not as yet descended to the trifles of his daily routine.

As he tapped briskly at the door of room 63 and put his hand upon the knob to enter, it suddenly came over him that he had done precisely such a thing before. That at about that time of some other morning he had been summoned by the call-bell to room 63—had knocked, turned the knob, entered—and—a loud cry, a shout thick with horror, broke from the man's lips, and he reeled back into the hallway.

There before him, in the center of the fateful room, half-dressed, battling with the invisible air, with blue lips and protruding eyes, stood The Man Who Did Things Twice.

The ominous, ghostly hush that followed the frightened attendant's cry was quickly broken by the hurry of many feet, and soon again the hotel was aroused and again Dr. Thiel bent over the prostrate and dying Henry Hobart.

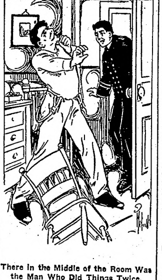
Outside and distinctly could be heard the clang of the fire-bells, but in the room of death all was sudden silence, all were hushed by the frightful, ghostly thought that the scene before them had been enacted before—the dying man with his discolored face and struggling hands, the physician bending over him, the alarmed, pitying faces of the gathered guests, and the frightened servants huddled in the background. And the man must die—die as he had died!

They looked on, and waited. Then, the end came, and Dr. Thiel, arising, said: "He is dead!" He had uttered those words once before and under like conditions. And the guests and the servants spoke together in horrified whispers, as they had done before; then the assembly broke up and the hall way was cleared as before!

There was something immeasurably painful about it all, to live a thing over in that frightful way, to be, as it were, mere puppets at a show, and one day to be to another day as a reflection in a mirror.

For a time those who had witnessed both tragedies seemed to live in a kind of trance, and moved about and whispered together like beings in a dream; but finally the natural reasserted itself, and then curiosity seized them.

What was the meaning of it? Henry Hobart had died and his body had been mutilated by the surgeon's knife. How, then, had he died a second time and his body shown no marks of the knife? Had they been deceived by a ghost? No; there in room 63 lay the dead man—flesh and blood—and seven blocks away, resting on a marble slab, with the water dripping continually on it, lay the other body of Henry Hobart—The Man Who Did Things Twice.



There in the Middle of the Room Was the Man Who Did Things Twice.

A sudden doubt came into the mind of Dr. Thiel, a misgiving that frightened him. Was that other body—that autopsy-marred body—still resting quietly on its slab at the morgue? Or—

Hastily quitting the hotel, he hurried towards the morgue, and suddenly came up against an insurmountable blank wall of mystery. The morgue was a heap of charred ruin and smoldering, steaming ashes, and if the autopsy-marred body of Henry Hobart had been lying on its slab during the period of the fire, then it had been totally consumed, and that other body up at the hotel was that of a second Henry Hobart; but, if the autopsy-marred body of Henry Hobart had not been lying quietly on its slab during the raging of the fire, then, in God's name, who and what was he who had died up at the Sumner house that morning?

TIME OF FATTENING.

In the Early Spring and the Fall the Best Gains Are Made.

A writer on the fattening of hogs says: There are two seasons of the year when the greatest gains can be made in hogs of the same type and under similar conditions with the same quantity of corn. These are in the early spring, before the weather becomes excessively hot, and in September, October and November, before it becomes excessively cold. Prudent farmers, therefore, aim to do the bulk of their feeding in these months. The objection to early fall feeding lies in this, that the packers usually make a combined effort to beat down the price of hogs at the beginning of the packing season. The fact that a very large per cent. of the hogs are fed in the fall of the year, and thrown upon the market, enables them to do so in ordinary seasons without much difficulty. This season, however, is likely to prove an exception. The packing season begins the 1st of November, and the sharp demand at present prices for both live hogs and pork products makes it probable that the usual effort will not be made, or, at least, not with the same earnestness this year. While it is true, as a rule, that higher prices prevail in February and March than in November and December, the difficulty in making weights during the first-named months, and the heavy expense involved in the way of keeping up the animal heat, go far to neutralize the difference in prices. Where the farmer does not sell in car load lots it is a good thing to have a few hogs to turn off at different seasons of the year. It is also a good plan to have the largest lots to turn off at the close of the season, when the greatest gains can be made with the same amount of corn.

DIP THE LAMBS.

Unless You Do You Cannot Be Free from Ticks.

Shepherds are universally complaining of the wide prevalance of ticks. No flocks are free from the pest except those that are dipped each year. I have been able to keep practically clear of them by dipping the lambs each spring after ewes have been shorn, writes a correspondent of Farm and Home.

As soon as this shearing is completed the ticks go to the lambs on account of the better protection offered them by the long lamb wool. One dipping may do, but it is best to be sure about it by dipping the lambs the second time about 12 days after the first.

I have always used a strong tobacco dip although I have no doubt that some of the commercial dips are all right. I get tobacco stems of cigar manufacturers. I fill a 200-pound fertilizer sack as full of them as I can, and then put sack and all into a kettle of water and boil thoroughly.

While this liquor is still milkwarm I dip the lambs into it and hold them under it for one minute, all but the head. By squeezing the liquor in and out of the wool thoroughly, and allowing it to drain back into the kettle, 50 gallons will suffice for 50 lambs.

To do the work quickly requires two men, one to hold the fore legs and head and the other the hind legs. By all means do not let this dipping go over until fall, for you will then have fattened the ticks, but never the lambs.

Running the Cows.

Does that dog chase the cows to and from pasture, or does the small boy do it? The result is about the same.

Physicians Recommend Castoria

CASTORIA has met with pronounced favor on the part of physicians, pharmaceutical societies and medical authorities. It is used by physicians with results most gratifying. The extended use of Castoria is unquestionably the result of three facts: First—The indisputable evidence that it is harmless: Second—That it not only allays stomach pains and quiets the nerves, but assimilates the food: Third—It is an agreeable and perfect substitute for Castor Oil. It is absolutely safe. It does not contain any Opium, Morphine, or other narcotic and does not stupefy. It is unlike Soothing Syrups, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, etc. This is a good deal for a Medical Journal to say. Our duty, however, is to expose danger and record the means of advancing health. The day for poisoning innocent children through greed or ignorance ought to end. To our knowledge, Castoria is a remedy which produces composure and health, by regulating the system—not by stupefying it—and our readers are entitled to the information.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Letters from Prominent Physicians addressed to Chas. H. Fletcher.

Dr. B. Halstead Scott, of Chicago, Ills., says: "I have prescribed your Castoria often for infants during my practice, and find it very satisfactory."

Dr. William Belmont, of Cleveland, Ohio, says: "Your Castoria stands first in its class. In my thirty years of practice I can say I never have found anything that so filled the place."

Dr. J. H. Taft, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I have used your Castoria and found it an excellent remedy in my household and private practice for many years. The formula is excellent."

Dr. R. J. Hamlen, of Detroit, Mich., says: "I prescribe your Castoria extensively, as I have never found anything to equal it for children's troubles. I am aware that there are imitations in the field, but I always see that my patients get Fletcher's."

Dr. Wm. J McCrann, of Omaha, Neb., says: "As the father of thirteen children I certainly know something about your great medicine, and aside from my own family experience I have in my years of practice found Castoria a popular and efficient remedy in almost every home."

Dr. J. R. Clausen, of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "The name that your Castoria has made for itself in the tens of thousands of homes blessed by the presence of children, scarcely needs to be supplemented by the endorsement of the medical profession, but I, for one, most heartily endorse it and believe it an excellent remedy."

Dr. R. M. Ward, of Kansas City, Mo., says: "Physicians generally do not prescribe proprietary preparations, but in the case of Castoria my experience, like that of many other physicians, has taught me to make an exception. I prescribe your Castoria in my practice because I have found it to be a thoroughly reliable remedy for children's complaints. Any physician who has raised a family, as I have, will join me in heartiest recommendation of Castoria."

Marlin

For shooting the swift flying, heavily feathered ducks and geese the Marlin 12-gauge repeating shotgun has no superior. This gun is exceedingly strong in construction and yet is not heavy. It is bored to throw an excellent pattern with great penetration. The solid top keeps out the weather and the brush and twigs of the blind, and the side ejector prevents the empty shells from being a nuisance to the shooter. It's the best bad weather gun.

The Marlin 12-gauge is suited to all forms of bird and trap shooting, and for durability, strength and ease of action is unexcelled. Made for both black and smokeless powders and for heavy loads. Two separate extractors make sure work.

OPSAHL NOMINATED

Michelet, Anderson and Nelson Win for County Offices.

There was a very light vote cast in the country precincts throughout Red Lake county. In Thief River Falls, St. Hilaire and Red Lake Falls there was a heavy vote cast in an attempt to nominate H. E. Ives for Representative and defeat Hon. J. J. Opsahl, who holds the office at present. In spite of the heroic measures the final count will show that Ives' plurality over Opsahl in the county is in the neighborhood of one hundred votes. In Clearwater county the Opsahl vote was more than double both the Ives and Funkley vote. Funkley carried Beltrami county over Opsahl. In both these counties the Ives vote was very small, and Opsahl's nomination by about 300 is conceded.

For county attorny Michelet defeated Richardson by about 30.

For Superintendent of Schools Anderson beat McAnulty by about 30.

Fer Sheriff Nelson won by over two to one over Jones.

| | |
|---|---|
| For Representative— | |
| Henry Funkley | 161 |
| Harry E. Ives | 571 |
| Jens J. Opsahl | 449 |
| For County Attorney— | |
| Wilhelm Michelet | 573 |
| Ira C. Richardson | 546 |
| For Superintendent of Schools— | |
| Herman F. Anderson | 903 |

Burma's Popular Sports.

A form of speculation very popular in Burma is bull racing. A certain native sportsman is the owner of one of these bulls, for which he has refused an offer of 10,000 rupees. It has won several races and is looked after and as carefully tended as a Derby favorite. The owner values it at 25,000 rupees, and, it is said, it brings him an annual income of from 12,000 to 15,000 rupees. It is carefully guarded by four men lest it may be got at and "doctored."

Burmans also patronize boxing eagerly, but the art can scarcely be practiced according to Queensberry rules, for we are told by a provincial reporter that he has observed that "even the best boxers strike out with their eyes tightly shut, and if they do hit each other it is more by chance than anything else."—Calcutta Statesman.

The Wrong Lady.

MAKING IT PLAIN.

Chairman Haugan, of Wyandotte, on School of Agriculture.

Plummer, Minn., Sept. 14, 1908.

Editor PLUMMER PIONEER:

I read in the Red Lake Falls Gazette something about the proposed Agricultural School to be located in St. Hilaire and that the County Board had ordered a special election to be held on the 29th day of September for the purpose of voting for or against the establishing of such a school. As I believe the erection and maintenance of such a school in Red Lake county would be quite an additional burden on the taxpayers I will ask you to kindly allow space for a few words giving my view upon this matter and asking my brother farmers and other taxpayers to think this matter over carefully that we may be fully satisfied upon several points before voting for the proposed school.

Do we need such a school in Red Lake county and will it benefit the majority of the taxpayers so as to repay them for the additional taxes we are likely to pay for such an institution? My answer will be in the negative because there is an agricul- school on the Experimental farm at Crookston which is, we may say, close up to our doors so that anyone in this county who wishes to, or can afford to send their children to such a school, can send them there at very little extra expense more than if it was located at St. Hilaire. Besides this agriculture is supposed to be taught in the common schools over the county.

We are told by those working for this school that it will be free, but I understand that this applies only to tution, which will be free upon the taxpayers pocket book, but those attending will have to pay for their board and other necessities. I have seen that some farmers can't afford to send their children to the common school in their own district because they need them to work on the farm or send them off some where else to make a few dollars in order to be able to raise enough for their necessary expenses, or in other words, to to make the daily bread for themselves and enough to fat up others that the farmers have to feed. It seems to me that the farmers are already taxed to their utmost capacity with schools and ditch taxes, and ditches we need more of if we only could afford it. I, for one, am paying high taxes for a county ditch without receiving much benefit from it before getting another big ditch, but I thought we had better throw off one burden before we put on another one.

They promise us that this school will get a big appropriation from the state and that it wont cost the county much. But let us not depend too much on promisies as they cant always be counted or kept. I think it will not be so easy to get an appropriation from the state when the state has such a school so near by as in Crookston. I also think our representative in the legislature would do much better to work for help for drainage and better roads. I have heard of people leaving Red Lake county because it was to wet and their boots was too short, but I never heard of anyone leaving Red Lake county for the want of an agricultural school.

Now, if the intention of those working for this proposed school was to make it of benefit to the whole county why not work to have it built in Plummer? Plummer is located in the center of the county and has better railroad service and it is easier to get to Plummer from all parts of the county than to St. Hilaire. It seems to me that the only intention is to boom St. Hilaire and it's close surroundings and have the taxpayers of the county to pay for the fun.

Why should this election be held at a time when so many of the voters in the farm districts are away from home on harvest and threshing work and wont be able to get to their polling places? Probably those asking for the election can answer.

The promoters of this agricultural school scheme ask us to give not less than $15,000 nor more than $20,000 as a starter and the law provides that the county board may appropriate as much as $20,000 per year for the support of the school. Once the school is started it would have to be kept up or the money invested would be a total loss. There is a large portion of Red Lake county that is very new and the settlers in it are very poor. They have to dig ditches and build roads for themselves. Put this large sum of $20,000 per year into that kind of improvements and it will benefit all the county a hundred times more than this agricultural school would. I think and believe we should develope the new parts of the county more before we force the people to donate $20,000 per year, or half that amount, for the benefit of a few people in St. Hilaire and vicinity.

So, brother farmers and other taxpayers, let us that are at home do our full duty to protect ourselves and our neighbors and meet up at that election on the 29th day of September, 1908,—don't forget the day—and vote against this proposed agricultural school at St. Hilaire. It's no use to grumble over high taxes afterwards; the only sympathy is likely to be that some pretentious and unscrupulous individual will tell us it is our own fault, and that we should have done so and so to prevent it.

Yours truly,
DAVID HAUGAN.

Cheese In the Middle Ages.

Cheese must have been a rather dear or scarce article of food in 1502, for it is recorded in the "Black Books" of the Honorable Society of Lincoln's Inn that at Easter term, 1502, it was "agreed by the governors and benchers this term that if any one of the society shall hereafter cut cheese immoderately at the time of dinner or supper or shall give cheese to any servant or to any other or shall carry it away from the table at any time he shall pay 4 pence for each offense. The butlers of the society shall present such defaulters weekly under pain of expulsion from office."—Law Times.

Her Test.

"When a young man proposes you should always be careful and test his love," cautioned the conservative chaperon.

"But I go one better, auntie," twittered the pretty girl. "Do you see this tiny bottle?"

"Yes. Does it contain perfume?"

Not Very Funny.

"I did my best to be entertaining," said the young man in a voice of sorrow.

"Did you succeed?"

"I'm afraid not. I recited Hamlet's soliloquy. She looked at me reproachfully for several seconds and then exclaimed. "I don't think that's very funny!"—London Telegraph.

PRESIDENT URGES ELECTION OF TAFT

REMARKABLE TRIBUTE PAID TO THE NOMINEE OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

HELD UP AS MODEL CITIZEN OF NATION.

In a Letter to His Old Friend, Mr. Conrad Kohrs of Helena, Montana, the Chief Executive Appeals to the Party to Support the Man Best Fitted to Carry On the Policies Inaugurated by the Present Administration.

Mr. Conrad Kohrs, of Helena, Montana, is an old time Montana cattle man and one of the most prominent citizens of Montana. He and the president came into close relationship more than 20 years ago when they were both members of the Montana Stock Growers' association, the president being at that time the representative of the Little Missouri Stock Growers in the association. The intimacy has been kept up ever since. Mr. Kohrs is one of the pioneer citizens of the northern Rocky mountain region and one of the men who has taken a leading part in its great development.

Sagamore Hill.
Oyster Bay, N. Y., Sept. 9, 1908.

My Dear Mr. Kohrs:

I have received your letter about the candidacy of Mr. Taft, the man who I feel is in an especial sense the representative of all that in which I most believe in political life.

Every good citizen should desire to see both prosperity and justice, prosperity and fair and righteous dealing as between man and man, obtain permanently in this great republic. As a people we are justly proud of our business industry, of our energy and intelligence in our work; and it is entirely right that we should ask ourselves as to any given course of conduct: "Will it be profitable?" But it is also no less emphatically true that the bulk of our people, the plain people who found in Abraham Lincoln their especial champion and spokesman, regard the question: "Is this morally right?" as even more important than the question: "Is this profitable?" when applied to any given course of conduct. Indeed, in the long run our people are sure to find that in all dealings, alike in the business and the political world, what is really profitable is that which is morally right. The last few years have seen a great awakening of the public conscience and the growth of a stern determination to do away with corruption and unfair dealing, political, economic, social. It is urgently necessary that this great reform movement should go on. But no reform movement is healthy if it goes on by spasms; if it is marked by periods of frenzied advance, followed, as such periods of frenzied advance must always be followed, by equally violent periods of reaction. To permit the direction of our public affairs to fall alternately into the hands of the revolutionaries and reactionaries, of the extreme radicals of unrest and of the bigoted conservatives who recognize no wrongs to remedy, would merely mean that the nation had embarked on a feverish course of violent oscillation which would be fraught with great temporary trouble, and would produce no adequate good in the end. The true friend of reform, the true foe of abuses, is the man who steadily perseveres in righting wrongs, in warring against abuses, but whose character and training are such that he never promises what he cannot perform, that he always a little more than makes good what he does promise, and that, while steadily advancing, he never permits himself to be led into foolish excesses which would damage the very cause he champions. In Mr. Taft we have a man who combines all of these qualities to a degree which no other man in our public life since the civil war has surpassed. The honest man of means, the honest and law-abiding business man, can feel safe in his hands because of the very fact that the dishonest man of great wealth, the man who swindles or robs his fellows, would not so much as dare to defend his evil-doing in Mr. Taft's presence. The honest wage-worker, the honest laboring man, the honest farmer, the honest mechanic or small trader, or man of small means, can feel that in a peculiar sense Mr. Taft will be his representative because of the very fact that he has the same scorn for the demagog that he has for the corruptionist, and that he would front threats of personal violence from a mob with the unequaling and lofty indifference with which he would front the bitter anger of the wealthiest and most powerful corporations.

I have naturally a peculiar interest in the success of Mr. Taft and in seeing him backed by a majority in both houses of congress which will heartily support his policies. For the last ten years, while I have been governor of New York and president, I have been thrown into the closest intimacy with him, and he and I have on every essential point stood in heartiest agreement, shoulder to shoulder. We have the same views as to what is demanded by the national interest and honor, both within our own borders, and as regards the relations of this nation with other nations. There is no fight for decency and fair dealing which I have waged in which I have not had his heartiest and most effective sympathy and support; and the policies for which I stand are his policies as much as mine.

Mr. Taft can be trusted to exact justice from the railroads for the very reason that he can be trusted to do justice to the railroads. The railroads are the chief instruments of interstate commerce in the country, and they can neither be held to a proper accountability on the one hand nor given proper protection on the other, save by the affirmative action of the federal government. The law as laid down by the federal courts clearly shows that the states have not and cannot devise laws adequate to meet the problems caused by the great growth of the railroads doing an interstate commerce business, for more than four-fifths of the business of the railroads is interstate, and under the constitution of the United States only the federal government can exercise control thereover. It is absolutely necessary that this control should be affirmative and thoroughgoing. All interstate business carried on by the great corporations should, in the interest of the whole people, be far more closely supervised than at present by the national government; but this is especially true of the railroads, which cannot exist at all save by the exercise of powers granted them on behalf of the people, and which, therefore, should be held to a peculiar accountability to the people. It is in the interest of the people that they should not be permitted to do injustice; and it is no less to the interest of the people that they should not suffer injustice. It is to the interest of shipper, farmer, wage-worker, business man, honest stockholder, and honest manager alike that there should be economy, honesty, intelligence and fair treatment of all. The stockholders must receive an ample return on their investments or the railroads cannot be built and successfully maintained; and the rates to shippers and the wages to employes, from the highest to the lowest, must all be conditioned upon this fact. On the other hand, in a public service corporation we have no right to allow such excessive profits as will necessitate rates being unduly high and wages unduly low. Again, while in all proper ways rates must be kept low, we must always remember that we have no right and no justification to reduce them when the result is the reduction of the wages of the great army of railroad men. A fair working arrangement must be devised according to the needs of the several cases, so that profits, wages and rates shall each be reasonable with reference to the other two—and in wages I include the properly large amounts which should always be paid to those whose masterful ability is required for the successful direction of great enterprises.

If there is one body of men more than another whose support I feel I have a right to challenge on behalf of Secretary Taft it is the body of wage-workers of the country. A stauncher friend, a fairer and truer representative, they cannot find within the borders of the United States. He will do everything in his power for them except to do that which is wrong; he will do wrong for no man, and therefore can be trusted by all men.

Mr. Taft has been attacked because of the injunctions he delivered while on the bench. I am content to rest his case on these very injunctions; I maintain that they show why all our people should be grateful to him and should feel it safe to intrust their dearest interests to him. Most assuredly he never has yielded and never will yield to threat or pressure of any sort, as little if it comes from labor as if it comes from capital; he will no more tolerate the violence of a mob than the corruption and oppression and arrogance of a corporation or of a wealthy man. He will not consent to limit the power of the courts to put a stop to wrongdoing wherever found. This very fact should make the labor people feel a peculiar confidence in him. His record as a judge makes the whole country his debtor. His actions and decisions are part of the great traditions of the bench. They guaranteed and set forth in striking fashion the rights of the general public as against the selfish interests of any class, whether of capitalists or of laborers. They set forth and stand by the rights of the wage-workers to organize and to strike, as unequivocally as they set forth and stand by the doctrine that no conduct will be tolerated that would spell destruction to the nation as a whole. As for the attack upon his injunctions in labor disputes, made while he was on the bench, I ask that the injunctions be carefully examined. I ask that every responsible and fair-minded labor leader, every responsible and fair-minded member of a labor organization, read these injunctions for himself. If he will do so, instead of condemning them he will heartily approve of them and will recognize this further astonishing fact that the principles laid down by Judge Taft in these very injunctions, which laboring people are asked to condemn, are themselves the very principles which are now embodied in the laws or practices of every responsible labor organization. Judge Taft on the bench—as since in the Philippines, in Panama, in Cuba, in the war department—showed himself to be a wise, a fearless, and an upright servant of the whole people, whose services to the whole people were beyond all price.

Let all fairminded men, wage-workers and capitalists alike, consider yet another fact. In one of his decisions upon the bench Judge Taft upheld in the strongest fashion, and for the first time gave full vitality to, the principle of the employers' liability for injuries done workmen. This was before any national law on the subject was enacted. Judge Taft's sense of right, his indignation against oppression in any form, against any attitude that is not fair and just, drove him to take a position which was violently condemned by short-sighted capitalists and employers of labor, which was so far in advance of the time that it was not generally upheld by the state courts, but which we are now embodying in the law of the land. Judge Taft was a leader, a pioneer, while on the bench, in the effort to get justice for the wage-worker, in jealous championship of his rights; and all upright and farsighted laboring men should hold it to his credit that at the same time he fearlessly stood against the abuses of labor, just as he fearlessly stood against the abuses of capital. If elected, he has shown by his deeds that he will be president of no class, but of the people as a whole; he can be trusted to stand stoutly against the two real enemies of our democracy—against the man who to please one class would undermine the whole foundation of orderly liberty, and against the man who in the interest of another class would secure business prosperity by sacrificing every right of the working people.

I would for no consideration advise the wage-worker to do what I thought was against his interest. I ask his support for Mr. Taft exactly as I ask such support from every farsighted and right-thinking American citizen; because I believe with all my heart that nowhere within the borders of our great country can there be found another man who will as vigilantly and efficiently as Mr. Taft support the rights of the working man as he will the rights of every man who in good faith strives to do his duty as an American citizen. He will protect the just rights of both rich and poor, and he will war relentlessly against lawlessness and injustice whether exercised on behalf of property or of labor.

On the bench Judge Taft showed the two qualities which make a great judge: wisdom and moral courage. They are also the two qualities which make a great president.

Sincerely yours,
THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Mr. Conrad Kohrs, Helena, Mont.

Unique Southern Railroad.

The Public Belt railroad of New Orleans has been partially completed, and is about ready to begin business. This Belt railroad is unique. The entire water front on both banks of the Mississippi river belongs, with the exception of several special landing places, to the municipality itself. In order to enable the railroad cars to reach the wharves and to lie alongside the ships for the transfer and exchange of cargoes the city of New Orleans, owning the river banks, has built along the river front a railroad whose tracks connect with those of all the trunk lines reaching this city, and by means of this municipal railway it is a simple affair to receive cars from all the trunk lines and to deliver cars to all these lines, and either connect with the shipping in the river or with the stores, warehouses and factories in various parts of the city, and with which the Belt connects.—N. # PLAYED HOST TO JAS. J. HILL

SEVENTIETH BIRTHDAY OF RAILROAD MAGNATE CELEBRATED FITTINGLY.

Employes in Service Since 1880 Give Testimonial Banquet to Chairman. Oldest Locomotive in the West Pulls the Train.

St. Paul, Sept. 17.—Surrounded by seventy men who have been life long employes of his great system of railways, James J. Hill last night spent what he termed one of the happiest evenings of his life at a banquet given in honor of the railroad magnate's seventieth birthday by members of his immense force of helpers, every one of whom had spent at least twenty-eight years continuous service with either the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba railway or the Great Northern.

Shortly before 3 o'clock the special train consisting of the old locomotive "William Crooks" upon whose tender the wood fuel was heaped sky high, and one coach, backed into the union depot train sheds. The old engine was a picturesque sight. A midget compared in size to the "Oriental Limited" monster which pulls out of the Twin Cities every morning, the "William Crooks," newly painted and recently completely overhauled, was the one attraction for the several thousands of spectators who had gathered to witness the departure of the unique train and its old time attendants and passengers. The engine was in charge of the veteran, Albion H. Smith, who has been in continuous service with Mr. Hill since 1868.

Smith took particular pains with the old time piece of machinery because of the fact that it was the first engine he had ever worked upon, after entering the service of the company. With Smith and acting in the capacity of fireman was J. H. Lynch now an engineer at St. Cloud, who has been in continuous service since 1869.

Upon arrival at Minnetonka Beach, a summer resort which during the lifetime of Hotel Lafayette was the pet of Mr. Hill, everything was a scene of life and bustle. The banquet hall in the club house, which now stands on the spot of the old historic Hotel Lafayette, had been almost entirely remodeled. The room had been newly plastered and decorated with ferns and flowers, suitable to the occasion. The table at which the many hosts and their distinguished guest were seated was one of the most unique of its kind.

It was shaped like a horseshoe, so that each and every one of the employes might be facing towards their beloved employer. Chairman Hill, of course, was assigned the post of honor in the center on the outside row of chairs. Directly in front of him upon the table had been constructed a miniature locomotive of similar design to the first one brought to the state by Mr. Hill, made of beautiful roses.

Mrs. Hill was invited and she readily accepted and was the only lady present.

A DEATH TRAP

Flames Trap 300 Workmen in a Michigan Tunnel.

Detroit, Mich., Sept. 15.—Two men dead, three others overcome by smoke and rescued by men brave enough to face death for others, even in the insensate fury of a panic, and 300 workmen, trapped by fire in the shaft of the Michigan Central tunnel, fighting like wild beasts for their lives—that is the story of a fire which just escaped being an awful holocaust.

The 300 men were working in the Windsor end of the tunnel, driving it deeper in under the river, when fire broke out in the heavy timbers of the shaft between them and the air.

WOMAN KILLED

Struck Down By Lightning in a Rainless Electrical Storm.

Ortonville, Minn., Sept. 15.—Mrs. Hendrick Nelson, a widow of the town of Artichoke, fifteen miles from here, was killed by a stroke of lightning during a rainless electrical storm. Her eight-year-old daughter, who was beside her at the time, was uninjured. Mrs. Nelson had gone into the yard with the child to pick up some things before it should begin to rain, and had been there but a few minutes when the lightning struck her. Death was instantaneous. Mrs. Nelson was the widow of a farmer and was about thirty-five years old. The girl is the only surviving relative.

Night Sweats & Cough.

E. W. Walton, Condr. S. P. Ry., 717 Van Ness St., San Antonio, Tex., writes: "During the summer and fall of 1902, my annoyance from catarrh reached that stage where it was actual misery and developed alarming symptoms, such as a very deep-seated cough, night sweats, and pains in the head and chest. I experimented with several so-called remedies before I finally decided to take a thorough course of Peruna.

"Two of my friends had gone so far as to inform me that the thing for me to do was to resign my position and seek a higher, more congenial climate. Everyone thought I had consumption and I was not expected to live very long.

"Having procured some Peruna, I decided to give it a thorough test and applied myself assiduously to the task of taking it, as per instructions, in the meantime.

"The effects were soon apparent, all alarming symptoms disappeared and my general health became fully as good as it had ever been in my life.

"I have resorted to the use of Peruna on two or three occasions since that time to cure myself of bad colds."

"Our little girl was two months old when she got a rash on her face and within five days her face and head were all one sore. We used different remedies but it got worse instead of better and we thought she would turn blind and that her ears would fall off. She suffered terribly, and would scratch until the blood came. This went on until she was five months old, then I had her under our family doctor's care, but she continued to grow worse. He said it was eczema. When she was seven months old I started to use the Cuticura Remedies and in two months our baby was a different girl. You could not see a sign of a sore and she was as fair as a new-born baby. She has not had a sign of the eczema since. Mrs. H. F. Budke, LeSueur, Minn., Apr. 15 and May 2, '07."

The Hero of Petticoat Pass

By J. O. Fagan

(Copyright, by Shortstory Pub. Co.)

The shortest route between the high veldt and the Leydenburg gold fields winds through a long kloof or gorge which, once upon a time, was the scene of a very remarkable battle. On account of the sulphurous smells from numerous hot springs and the weird electrical discharges, visible at night between its ironstone cliffs and pinnacles, the kloof itself was originally known as Satan's Firebox. But later when, in the war with the Macatees, the Boers were routed and one night upwards of 100 women and children, hotly pursued by a regiment of Kafirs, fled screaming through the kloof, the name was significantly changed to Petticoat pass.

But, although the pass was usually interesting, its inhabitants were vastly more so. Between the southern gateway at Steelpoort and its northern outlet, near Leydenburg, a wonderfully intelligent race of baboons has lived for centuries high up among the ironclad precipices. In course of time the white hunter came along with his deadly rifle and occasionally picked one of them off the rocks, just for the fun of the thing, and when the Kafirs took a notion to poison them for the sake of their teeth, then the baboons in Petticoat pass were driven to defend themselves. In a word, they began to throw stones. So long as the wagons and the horsemen kept moving all was well, but when they loitered or stopped the whirring of pebbles through the air, and occasionally the appearance of enormous bowlders cut loose from the crags above and shot down through the air like cannon balls, never failed to remind the loiterers that they were trespassers.

In their intercourse with the outside world the baboons made no distinction between black and white until one day an event took place that practically closed the pass to the black races forever.

At the Steelpoort end of the pass the Kafirs began to encroach. They built huts and planted gardens on the fertile slopes near the portal. With angry demonstrations the baboons protested, but the Kafirs were indifferent to the clamor. But when the sugar cane ripened the baboons in the night time swooped down from the crags and helped themselves to what they considered their rightful share of the harvest, whereupon the Kafirs, who thoroughly understood the peculiarities of baboon nature, played upon them a villainous trick.

One day, in plain sight of their enemies, who were watching them from the heights above, the Kafirs brought a number of large calabashes filled with a poisonous liquid and placed them in a row in one of the gardens. Then they went through the form of pretending to wash their faces with the stuff, after which they left the calabashes in the gardens and departed. Watching their opportunity, the baboons came down to investigate the business and, being unable to restrain their hereditary impulse to imitate the proceedings of others, they forthwith washed their faces in the poison and scampered away again. In a short time the venom began to work, the flesh fell from their faces, and finally a number of them died in great agony.

For many days afterwards travelers through the kloof reported an extraordinary state of affairs. There was much excitement and jabbering and much pitiful crying and calling to each other from cliff to cliff. But when the period of mourning was over the baboons settled down to business—the business of war. The preparations they made for hostilities with the Kafirs were astonishing. Baboons were summoned from far and near, and the population in the kloof was soon doubled. They divided themselves into companies under leaders. They worked like beavers, and before long huge cairns of stones appeared at intervals along the route, and at places where the crags rose almost perpendicularly from the roadway great bowlders were rolled to the edge of the precipices, and even ledges were undermined and made ready to slide down and overwhelm the invaders.

From the day when these arrangements were completed the baboons paid no attention whatever to white men, and after two or three unfortunate Kafirs had been stoned to death and torn to pieces the black race gave Petticoat pass an extremely wide berth. Consequently, the spider-like watchers up in their fastnesses had a long time to wait, but the whirligig of time brings about its opportunities for revenge, even to baboons.

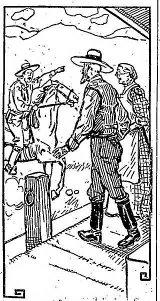
Just outside the Steelpoort end of the pass Max Pincus, a German trader, conducted a small store for the accommodation of travelers. On the day the baboons were poisoned, Max was riding through the kloof, and came across a little boy baboon, whose face was terribly burned by the action of the acid. The little fellow was crying piteously, and Max took him up in his arms and carried him to the store, where Max's mother, who had some knowledge of remedies, doctored him so successfully that his eyesight was saved. For several months her curious little patient was very shy and wild, but the good woman was indefatigable in her efforts to tame him, and finally she was rewarded with astonishing success. As the young baboon grew up he became very much attached to his benefactress, and there was no mistaking his gratitude.

But one morning, to the great surprise of Mother Pincus, a young lady baboon came down from the hills and began to make love to Stoffel. Nearly a week passed before she finally triumphed and led him away.

The following morning, however, he returned, and after watching him for a day or two, Mother Pincus concluded that considerable business was mixed up with his love affair. Indeed, the Boers, who relate almost incredible stories about the intelligence of these colored baboons, claim that the embassy of the maiden was merely a trick to seduce him from his allegiance to his benefactress and that, on his first visit to the kloof, Stoffel was immediately appointed to the leadership of the baboon army on account of his preeminent intelligence and knowledge of the outside world.

One day a horseman galloped up to the store and reported that war had broken out between the Boers and the Macatees and that the baboons in the pass were evidently aware of the fact, for swarms of them were coming down from the heights and were preparing for trouble. Ten days later the Boers were defeated with considerable loss at Johannes Kop and, encouraged by the tidings, the Mapock Kafirs flew to arms and rushed up the valley towards Steelpoort, burning and slaying. At their approach the women and children on the farms fled in terror, and just before nightfall nearly 100 of these panic-stricken refugees entered the pass, with a large commando of Kafirs close at their heels.

The story of the encounter that followed between the baboons and the Kafirs is derived partly from the account of the Boer women, but principally from a survey of the battlefield on the following day. A few of the hindmost of the refugees had already been captured when, in passing through a narrow defile, the Kafirs were assailed by a fierce rain of stones from the surrounding cliffs. Undismayed, the Kafir horde pressed on, but the roadway beneath them had been undermined, and when enormous bowlders, falling hundreds of feet through the air, smashed through the thin crust, great pits were laid bare, into which the Kafirs floundered, and were then mercilessly pelted with fusillades of sharp-pointed rocks. But the real fighting occurred when the Kafirs, filled with dismay at the carnage that ensued in the pits, endeavored to retreat.



Reported That War Had Broken Out.

On the following morning a very pathetic sequel to the battle occurred when Stoffel, grievously wounded, dragged himself back to his old home at the store. It was a painful and useless journey, for the buildings had been burned to the ground and nothing remained but the smouldering embers. But Stoffel had come home for a definite purpose. He at once began to scrape and dig among the ruins until he succeeded in finding a few rags and a small bottle containing some liquid. Tenderly he stanched the flow of blood with the rags and emptied some of the fluid into the wound. Feeling no better from the application, he sought other rags and another bottle. His faith in the remedy was supreme. In this way his eyes had been cured, and in many other cases he had witnessed the successful application of rags and bottles. But, growing weaker and weaker, his thoughts naturally turned to his kind foster-mother. Despairingly, he glanced from side to side. Many a time he had watched for her homecoming. Then he tucked his pitiful face under his forearm and curled himself up, just like a dog going to sleep. Looking down upon him you could have counted the almost imperceptible heart beats under the gray, shaggy covering—one, two, three—and then Stoffel, the hero of Petticoat pass, was dead.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Killed a Bear.

South St. Paul.—Driven from the Northern woods by the forest fires that are raging on the Mesaba range, a big black bear lost his way and ran into South Park.

The bear was first seen in front of A. D. S. Clark's residence, postmaster at South Park. The animal was running along with his tongue hanging out and seemed completely tired out. He ran down the bluff in front of Clark's house toward the river, where he quenched his thirst.

The crowd of hunters increased and about 8 o'clock the animal was killed by M. Mikkelson of South St. Paul, who came upon the bear on the outskirts of the Park. It took only one well directed shot from Mikkelson's gun to lay the bear out.

Badly Burned.

St. Paul.—Joseph Crevenick, seven years old, living with his parents at 903 Armstrong street, was terribly burned, and if the burns do not prove fatal it will be because of the timely and heroic action of Mrs. A. Sommerhauser. As the boy appeared on the street with his clothing on fire Mrs. Sommerhauser, with no thought but that of trying to save the boy's life, quickly removed her skirt, and winding it around the frantic boy, extinguished the flames.

It is possible, however, that assistance came too late, as the boy was in a critical condition, the clothing had been practically burned from the upper part of his body, and his arms, waist and the back of his head were badly burned.

Must Not Change.

St. Paul.—Insurance companies, after Oct. 1, can no longer force firms to employ a night watchman. The insurance commissioner has ruled that night watchmen riders cannot be attached to fire insurance policies. He has also eliminated the clause requiring the books of a concern to be kept in an iron safe.

Following the advice of the attorney general, the commissioner will also notify the companies doing business in this state, that it is illegal to reduce the amount of insurance in case a vacant dwelling burns. The premium may be increased, or a new policy issued, but the amount of insurance cannot be decreased.

Train Wrecked.

Rochester.—The accommodation passenger and freight train that runs between this city and Zumbrota was wrecked near Pine Island, and with the exception of the engine and one car, the train was completely destroyed by fire. The train was made up of seven cars, two empties, two cars of coal, one car of merchandise, one oil tank and the passenger coach. The train became derailed and the oil tank exploded, sparks from the engine igniting the oil, causing the destruction. There were a number of passengers on the train, but all escaped with being badly shaken. These were placed in the empty box car and taken to Pine Island.

Good Contribution.

Minneapolis.—Minneapolis again demonstrated its willingness to come to the aid of the afflicted and the suffering when 2,300 persons assembled in the Auditorium for the entertainment given for the sufferers in the Iron Range district. A sum of $330.27 was contributed to the relief fund and most of it was received at the conclusion of G. L. Morrill's illustrated lecture in which the sufferings and the miseries of the fire sufferers were vividly portrayed.

State Fair Attendance.

Hamline.—Official figures from the state fair show that the total attendance last week was 326,753, which is greater by 40,125 than the attendance of 1907. Tuesday was the banner day, with admissions numbering 66,922, while Saturday was the smallest, with 34,469. Reports of the sale of tickets show the total receipts from that source to be $162,781, or $32,310 greater than for the 1907 fair. The complete financial statement will not be made for some time.

NEWS NOTES.

St. Paul.—Fire which started in Gribben Lumber company's plant causes an estimated loss of $95,000.

St. Paul.—Farmers along Dodd road may be forced to take decisive action and stop practice of automobile drivers kicking up so much dust.

East Grand Forks.—An action involving one of the most valuable pieces of property in East Grand Forks has been started by the Minneapolis Brewing company. The action is brought to quiet title, according to plaintiff, but there are enough side issues to make it an interesting case.

St. Paul—At a meeting of the German-American Alliance held in Mozart hall last night arrangements were made for German day which is to be celebrated Sept. 27.

Minneapolis.—An attempt to fill a kerosene lamp over a light gas stove caused the death of Mrs. Anton Bloomburg of 1700 Washington street northeast.

Grand Meadow.—The McGuire-Atwood company of Minneapolis has purchased the townmill property formerly owned by the Le Roy Fiber company.

PLANT TRAMP BY INSTINCT.

California Cactus Blows Around the Desert for Months.

Curious among vegetable growths and one which is seldom seen of men is the rootless cactus of the California desert, says the Techical World. This plant, a round, compact growth, rolls about the level floor of the desert for some eight or nine months of the year, tossed hither and yon by the winds which blow with fierceness over all of California's sand plat during those months.

At the coming of the rains, or rather the cloudbursts, which sweep the desert in its springtime, this cactus takes root wherever it happens to have been dropped by the last wind of which it was the plaything and immediately begins to put out all around it small shoots, which in turn become cacti, exactly like the parent plant.

These young growths increase in size rapidly, sucking the moisture both from the parent plant and from the surrounding earth. The roots do not penetrate the soil deeply, but spread often over a circle whose radius is not less than ten feet. These roots, too, are small, but practically innumerable, and they get every bit of moisture and plant food to be had in the territory they cover.

IN THE OLD MILITIA DAYS.

"Captain, you will appear on the parade ground with your company at ten o'clock for inspection."

"Sorry, colonel, but you'll have to postpone it till to-morrow! I promised my wife that she could use the cannon to-day for a churn!"

A Timely Air.

During one of the political tours of Mr. Cleveland, in which he was accompanied by Secretary Olney, he arrived during a severe storm at a town in which he was to speak. As he entered the carriage with his friends and was driven from the station the rain changed to hail, and immense stones battered and rattled against the vehicle. A brass band, rather demoralized by the storm, stuck bravely to its post and played.

"That is the most realistic music I have ever heard," remarked the president.

"What are they playing?" asked the secretary of state.

"'Hail to the Chief'—with real hail!" rejoined Mr. Cleveland.

"THE PALE GIRL."

Did Not Know Coffee Was the Cause.

In cold weather some people think a cup of hot coffee good to help keep warm. So it is—for a short time but the drug—caffeine—acts on the heart to weaken the circulation and the reaction is to cause more chilliness.

There is a hot wholesome drink which a Dak. girl found after a time makes the blood warm and the heart strong.

She says:

"Having lived for five years in N. Dak., I have used considerable coffee owing to the cold climate. As a result I had a dull headache regularly, suffered from indigestion, and had no 'life' in me.

"I was known as 'the pale girl,' and people thought I was just weakly. After a time I had heart trouble and became very nervous, never knew what it was to be real well. Took medicine but it never seemed to do any good.

"Since being married my husband and I both have thought coffee was harming us and we would quit, only to begin again, although we felt it was the same as poison to us.

"Then we got some Postum. Well, the effect was really wonderful. My complexion is clear now, headache gone, and I have a great deal of energy I had never known while drinking coffee.

"I haven't been troubled with indigestion since using Postum, am not nervous, and need no medicine. We have a little girl and boy who both love Postum and thrive on it and Grape-Nuts."

"There's a Reason."

Shower of Sulphur.

Charolles, a small town 30 miles from Macon, in France, has recently been visited by a shower of sulphur. The roofs, gardens, fields, vineyards, rivers and ponds were covered with a yellow dust, and for some time the peasants in the fields were troubled by a sulphurous biting odor which made breathing difficult.

Marine Insurance.

Marine insurance is the oldest kind of modern insurance. Its principles were first employed in the fourteenth century by the merchants of Barcelona, in Spain, when that city was the capital of the kingdom of Catalonia and when its hardy mariners were second to none in the world. About the same time, and also at Barcelona, the famous code of maritime laws known as the "consulado del mar" was promulgated, which is the foundation of the present shipping laws of every country.

OFFICIAL PAPER of RED LAKE COUNTY

Subscription price, $1.50 per year
If paid in advance, $1.00.

Entered at the Post-office in Plummer, Minn. as Second Class Mail Matter.

Some of the voters undoubtedly swallowed a copious draft from the Standard Oil man's bottle. If there had been more men and enough bottles their candidate might have fared better at the polls.

There are about 2,400 taxpayers in Red Lake county. Add $20,000 a year to their taxes and, if every one paid an equal amount, it would mean just $8.33⅓ each. Figure this out for yourself, Mr. Taxpayer, before you vote to establish an agricultural school at St. Hilaire.

It is quite likely that the proposition to establish an agricultural school at St. Hilaire may be defeated at the special election on the 29th inst. The farmers, in the eastern half of the county at least, will vote against it almost unanimously, and neither Red Lake Falls nor Thief River Falls are in a position to antagonize that much of the county by voting to add a big load to their already too high taxes.

Speaker Johnson, of the Minnesota House of Representatives, seems to be a man with a hobby. Three years ago he secured the passage of a bill providing for the establishment of agricultural schools in counties and allowing county boards to appropriate $20,000 per annum to support such a school. In Red Lake county, for the first time since the passage of his bill, he has found some parties who, from selfish motives, want to experiment with this hobby of Mr. Johnson's. Seems queer that if this proposition were snch a wonderfully fine thing for a county, that some of the older and richer counties have not tried it before now. Think of it, three years of golden opportunity that no county in the state knew enough to take edvantage of.

Notice of Hearing.

To the Legal Voters of Red Lake County, Minnesota:

Notice is hereby given, That a petition is on file in my office, signed by legal voters of said county to the number of two thousand three hundred forty two, praying that the county seat of said county of Red Lake be changed to the city of Thief River Falls in said county, and that a special meeting of the County Board will be held at the Court House in the city of Red Lake Falls, Red Lake county, Minnesota, on the 26th day of September, A. D., 1908, at the hour of eleven o'clock in the forenoon, to consider said petition at which time and place any legal voter in said county may appear in person, or by counsel, and be heard.

The Fourmilion.

"In the Sahara," said an explorer, "there is a little insect that throws sand, and its volleys slay. They call it the fourmilion. The fourmilion digs itself a funnel shaped hole of the circumference of a silver dollar. It lies hidden and watchful in the bottom of this hole, and when a spider or ant or beetle comes cautiously prospecting down the steep and slippery sides the inhospitable fourmilion launches upon its guest volley after volley of sand—a hail of stinging sand so abundant, so suffocating, so blinding that the visitor loses his head. He rolls unconscious for the nonce to the bottom of the hole, and the fourmilion calmly dismembers him before he has time to come to himself again and puts him in the larder for the next meal."

Blooms but to Die.

The taliput palm (Corypha umbraculifera) of Ceylon, whose leaves are put to such numerous uses by the Cingalese, bears fruit but once during its life. This elegant tree measures about ten feet round the trunk and attains a height of about 180 feet. The flowers, the appearance of which presages death to the tree, are inclosed in a tall spathe which bursts with a loud report, disclosing a huge plume of beautiful blossom. The inflorescence is succeeded by equally conspicuous bunches of fruit. When these have ripened the tree withers rapidly and in the course of a fortnight may be seen prostrate and decaying on the spot it adorned.

He Might Have Married.

Fitz-Greene Halleck never married, yet, as Mr. Howe reminds us in his American Bookman, he could not have been without attractions, for a certain superior lady is reported to have declared:

"If I were on my way to church to be married, yes, even if I were walking up the aisle, and Halleck were to offer himself, I'd leave the man I had promised to marry and take him."

To this perhaps should be joined his epigram, written for a young lady who had asked for his autograph:

There wanted but this drop to fill
The wifeless poet's cup of fame.
Hurrah! There lives a lady still Willing to take his name.

Marlin

For shooting the swift flying, heavily feathered ducks and geese the Marlin 12-gauge repeating shotgun has no superior. This gun is exceedingly strong in construction and yet is not heavy. It is bored to throw an excellent pattern with great penetration. The solid top keeps out the weather and the brush and twigs of the blind, and the side ejector prevents the empty shells from being a nuisance to the shooter. It's the best bad weather gun.

The Marlin 12-gauge is suited to all forms of bird and trap shooting, and for durability, strength and ease of action is unexcelled. Made for both black and smokeless powders and for heavy loads. Two separate extractors make sure work.

Agricultutal School Slould be Defeated.

L. H. Johnson, of Minneapolis, Spaaker of the house of Representatives and father of the county Agricultural School bill, was here Wednesday and made a public address on behalf of the proposed county Agricultural school which is to be established at St. Hilaire provided the voters of county give the proposition a majority at the special election to be held next Tuesday.

Mr. Johnson was brought here by Mr. D. Patterson, of St. Hilaire, for the purpose of answering the arguments advanced in a letter written by David Haugan, of Wyandotte township, and published in the PIONEER last week. But Mr. Johnson did not answer the arguments in Mr. Haugan's letter in the least. He confined his remarks to explaining what a nice thing the school would be if the people thought they could afford it now. He quoted part of Mr. Haugan's letter which stated that the law provided that $20,000 per year might be appropriated by the county board for the establishment and maintenance of such a school. Mr. Johnsou stated that this was not correct but after his address was finished he admitted that the law did so provide. He further stated that in this county school tuition would be free but that at the Crookston school a tuition was charged which he was informed was $50 per term. This he also admitted might be a mis-statement; that he did not know if it were true but he had been so informed. Brought right down to the common sense and fair argument of the question Mr. Johnson stated that he simply believed it would be a very fine thing to have in Red Lake County but that he would urge no man to vote for it if he, the voter, did not think the time was ripe for such an institution

Here is the part of the statute relating to the amount which the county board may appropriate. It is in Section 1, of Chapter 314, Laws of 1905:

"Section 1. The board of county commissioners of any county is hereby authorised to appropriate money for the organization, equipment and maintenance of county schools of agriculuure and domestic economy, and to levy and spread on the tax roll a sufficient sum to carry into effect the several provisions of this act, but not exceeding the sum of twenty thousand dollars (20,000) in any one year-"

That is, if that amount be required, the board has the right to levy an annual tax on the 2,400 tax payers of the county at the pro rata rate of $8.33⅓ each. Any one can figure that out. Mr. Johnson and the people of St. Hilaire anb vicinity, who are pushing the project, estimate that it will cost much less than this. Their figures are not given as facts, only their estimates. The law is plain.

Regarding the tuition and the statement that tuition is charged in the State School of Agriculture at Crookston the truth is that a pupil entering that school is required to deposit $5.00 as a guarantee for the damage or breakage of tools, etc. At the close of the term, if no breakage or dam- has occured, this money is refunded. There has been no other tuition charged at the Crookston school. Is it honest for the backers of this county school project to spread the statement that a tuition fee of $50 is charged.

In the newly settled eastern part off the county there are road taxes ditch taxes and school taxes which the older part of the county in the west do not have to pay to any where near the same extent. On the eleven towns the settlers have to pay a stiff price to the goverment for the land while the west end was largely settled as free homesteads. It is sad to think that these people in the west end of the county and the people in the cities should try to add any burden whatever to their poor neighbors on the reservation.

The Pioneer editor offered to Mr. Johnson and Patterson to pay the expenses for Mr. Johnson to take a trip over the reservation that he might see and know the conditions and the burdens of the settlers. Mr. Johnson declined. The Pioneer editor asked these gentlemen why it was that none of the older counties had taken advantage of this law. Their answer was that they expected Otter Tail county to try for it next year.

If the voters of this county give this matter careful consideration the Pioneer bellves that the proposition will be overwhelmingly defeated at the election next Tuesday.

CORKS HAVE DISEASES.

"To the average person a cork is a cork," said a well known restaurant man the other day. "But smell this cordial. Would you believe it?" And he held up a bottle supposed to have the bouquet of cherries all the way from the blossom to the pit. The odor was musty and altogether unpleasant—in fact, it was decidedly bad. He continued:

"Now, the man paying 20 cents for his tiny glass of cordial after dinner is entitled to have it free from imperfections. If he bought a bottle of wine with that flavor, he would say the wine was bad, for ninety men out of a hundred know nothing about bad corks. He would want another bottle of wine or his money refunded, and he would be right.

"The defect is in a tiny worm in the cork that is often invisible to the man cutting corks and sometimes cannot be seen after the cork is drawn. A customer will taste the wine and say, 'Bad wine.' You explain about the cork, and he will say: 'Impossible. That was a beautiful cork—beautiful!' And yet we know that the contents of the bottle never could have that flavor under other conditions.

"I tell you there are millions of dollars waiting for the man who can invent a perfect cork that will stand the test of years for flavor and preserving qualities. If it could be proved that his invention was perfect, he would make millions in a month."—New York Herald.

MRS. ANDREW JOHNSON.

The Life In Washington Was Not a Happy Time For Her.

Mrs. Johnson was so much of an invalid that outside of intimate family friends very few knew her. She appeared only twice in public during her husband's administration. Still, her influence was a strong one, and it was exerted in the direction of toleration and gentleness. A slight movement of her hands, a touch on her husband's arm, a "Now, Andrew," made it easy to see that the woman who had helped him through his struggling youth and given her health to his service, who had taught him to write and had read to him through long winter evenings in the little tailor shop that his active mind might be fed while he was practicing his trade still held her place in his life. She was a sweet faced woman who showed traces of beauty through the sharpened lines caused by the old fashioned consumption which was wearing her out. Her face was not unlike that of the late Mrs. McKinley. The death of her eldest son was a blow from which she never fully recovered. The life in Washington was not a happy time for her She told me herself that she was far more content when her husband was an industrious young tailor.—William H Crook in Century.

Nubar Pasha and the Pipes.

Soon after the occupation of Cairo by the British troops the late Nubar Pasha took a prodigious fancy to the music of the Black Watch and had the idea of having a servant taught the use of the bagpipes. Nubar dispatched a French friend, who spoke English very well, to interview a piper on the subject.

Donald replied: "Weel, he micht learn or he micht no'. Bit, let me tell ye, it needs wind an' mickle strength tae fill the bags o' the pipes an' keep blawin'. Sae if yin o' thae Egyptian chaps took the job on he'd need tae be bandaged a' ow're like yin o' thae auld mummies, or maybe he'd burst himsel'."

This conversation was reported to Nubar, who took the piper's remarks seriously. So he gave up the idea of having a skirler attached to his household, as the use of the bagpipes was attended with the prospect of such danger to the performer.—Westminster Gazette.

Depth of Cyclones.

From the study of clouds an official of the United States weather bureau concludes that ordinary cyclones which traverse our country from west to east are not more than two or three miles in depth, although their diameter is many hundreds of miles. In other words, their motion does not affect the upper regions of the atmosphere. In the case of hurricanes this authority finds that the depth is greater, amounting to as much as five or six miles. But higher currents blow directly across the cyclonic and anticyclonic areas which produce storms and fair weather at the surface of the earth.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Easy Money.

Theodore Hook was one of the Garrick club's most famous members. He generally arrived at the club late in the afternoon and "never went home till morning." He had been told by the doctors, he said, to avoid the night air. A member of the club in Hook's time predicted the advent of the millennium at the end of three years. "All right," cried Hook. "Give me a five pound note now, and I will repay you £50 at the millennium."

The new planing mill at the S. P. K. Lumber, Cedar & Tie Co's plant here commenced running on Monday last and the company is now ready to supply the public with any kind of finished lumber. Give them a call if you want lumber. They can supply the best kind of stock at lowest prices.

After November 1st all subscription accounts to this paper in arrears one year or more will be placed in the hands of a collector who will collect same at the full rate of $1.50 per year. The little yellow slip on your paper shows the date your subscription is paid to. Please look at the little yellow slip and keep your subscription paid up.

To The Voters.

Board of Supervisors.

A Puzzle In Figures.

Take any number of three different figures, as 471, under it place the same figures in reverse order, subtract the lesser number and you will find that the middle figure of the result is invariably 9. Why it is so is something that only the most learned mathematical scholars can explain. Here is our case worked out:

| | |
|---|---|
| Taking any number, say.................... | 471 |
| Reversing figures.......................... | 174 |
| Subtracting, we have...................... | 297 |

Further still, we can now reverse this number 297 in the same way and add the two numbers and the result will always come 1089. Thus:

| | |
|---|---|
| Taking ........................................ | 297 |
| Reversing ................................... | 792 |
| Adding, we have........................... | 1089 |

Why should the answer always come out the same? Here's something for you to work over.

HAPPENINGS OF A WEEK

Record of the Most Important Events Condensed for the Perusal of the Busy Man.

POLITICAL.

President Roosevelt issued a red-hot statement concerning the Senator Foraker incident, turning it to the advantage of Judge Taft, who, he showed, had rejected in July a proposition that he consent to an indorsement of the Ohio senator.

C. W. Swisher withdrew as Republican candidate for governor of West Virginia.

Senator Foraker of Ohio cancelled all his speechmaking engagements in the campaign because of the charges against him of having accepted money from the Standard Oil Company.

PERSONAL.

Allan Forbes, a well-known clubman, was found guilty at Salem, Mass., of cruelty to his pony during a game of Myopia. A fine of $50 was imposed.

Mrs. Jack Gardner, society leader and art collector of Boston, Mass., created a sensation in the exclusive Copley square section of that city by walking down the street in a sheath gown open to the knee.

Col. William F. Stewart of the coast artillery, whose case, because of his detail to the ungarrisoned post at Fort Grant, Ariz., has been before the public for some time, has been ordered to appear before a retiring board at Washington, where he will be examined as to his disability.

Bishop Carmichael of the Church of England, diocese of Montreal, was reported lying at the point of death. He was stricken with an attack of heart failure.

Clint O. Heath, formerly a real estate dealer and promoter of Denver, was convicted of embezzling $8,500 from a New York woman.

Edward H. Harriman, whose financial rescue of the Erie system gave the well-nigh bankrupt railroad a new lease of life, is said to be considering the leasing of the Erie to the Illinois Central road.

Congressman Laning of Ohio was acquitted of the charge of misapplying funds of the Laning Printing Company.

Count Leo Tolstoi has been elected to honorary membership in the faculty of the University of St. Petersburg.

Mrs. Carrie Nation called on Judge Taft and tried to discuss the liquor question with him.

FILIBUSTER PLOT NIPPED IN BUD

ORGANIZED FOR THE PURPOSE OF OVERTHROWING COLOMBIAN GOVERNMENT.

Alleged Expedition Composed of 600 American Recruits Ready to Embark for the Overthrow of South American Republic.

Boston, Sept. 24.—The Post to-day publishes the disclosure of an alleged filibustering expedition which intended to start from this city on Oct. 1 composed of 600 men fully armed and equipped for the overthrow of the United States of Colombia.

Attention was first called to the proposed expedition by advertisements in local papers several months ago calling for recruits, graduates of the United States army and navy preferred.

Offices, it is claimed, were opened in Boston, Worcester and Lynn, and 600 men were secured.

Four machine guns and two Hotchkiss guns, with other equipment, it is claimed, had already been purchased from New York concerns.

A British tramp steamer had been secured, it is claimed, to transport the troops and arms to South America. A former major in the United States army, who lives in Providence, R. I., was secured to command, and the date of departure set for Oct. 1.

BARK LAST.

American Vessel Goes Ashore on Coronation Island.

Juneau, Alaska, Sept. 23.—The bark Star of Bengal is ashore on Coronation island and has 136 men aboard, of which 100 are Japanese and Chinese.

She is on the west side of the island and the crew has no chance to land.

The United States cableship Burnside has gone to her relief, but may not be able to reach the wreck, owing to the bad weather prevailing.

San Francisco, Sept. 22.—The Merchants' Exchange received a dispatch today from Ft. Wrangel, Alaska, stating that the American bark Star of Bengal, Captain Thompson, had been driven ashore on the Coronation island and was a total wreck. Nothing is said of the fate of the officers and crew of the wrecked bark but the presumption is that they were still on the vessel.

SIX LIVES LOST.

Forest Fires Devastate Towns in Northern Michigan.

Marinette, Wis., Sept. 23.—A dispatch from Forest City, a village across the Michigan line of Marinette county, reports that place destroyed by flames driven in from the forest fires and that six lives were lost. It is understood that the sawmill owned by the Morgan interests of Oshkosh was completely destroyed, together with a large store and 30 dwellings. The forest fires have broken out afresh in this section and reports of burning farm houses and timber cut and uncut are coming in from all sides.

Safe Cracked at Sioux City.

Sioux City, Iowa, Sept. 22.—At an early hour yesterday morning the safe in the office of Barish Bros., coal dealers, was cracked by safeblowers who got away with the contents, amounting to $100. The firm only the other day before removed $1,500 to a depository. The door was blown off by the use of nitro-glycerin.

Fatally Shot.

Fergus Falls, Minn., Sept. 23.—Arthur Dahle, five years old, living in Pommedeterre township, was accidently shot by his uncle while the latter was hunting, and died here yesterday from effects of the injuries. He ran in front of the gun just as it was discharged, and received the charge of shot in the thighs.

Released.

Springfield, Minn., Sept. 24.—Abe Raymer, who has been on trial with the charge of having been one of the leaders in the recent riots in which two negroes were lynched was acquitted. Only one ballot was taken by the jury after receiving the instructions.

Refugees at Eau Claire.

Eau Claire, Wis., Sept. 23.—Refugees from Northern and Eastern Wisconsin are flocking into Eau Claire to escape the forest fires.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Warning.

St. Paul.—State Fire Marshal Edward Peterson issues a bulletin to the people of Minnesota warning that all neglect of burning brush or grass or any other fire started by persons within the state will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law. The bulletin applies generally to the entire state, but particularly to those cities and settlements surrounded by forests. The bulletin reads:

A large number of fires are reported at this time of the year as being caused by carelessness in burning grass and brush.

Besides the great danger to the forest regions from this source every city and village is seriously threatened by such fires within its limits.

This class of fires are as a rule set by children who recklessly play with this element of destruction. Children should be taught early the danger in playing with fire. If warnings are not heeded they should be dealt with to the full extent of the law. Every violation of the law in this respect should be followed with arrest and punishment. And police officers, constables, wardens and fire chiefs should show no leniency with this class of offenders.

Requests for investigations of fires sent to this department will have prompt attention.

Fought Insane Man.

Minneapolis.—Dr. I. W. Rigs of Aurora, S. D., caused a panic in the Ryan hotel by running through the corridors with a razor in one hand and a water pitcher in the other, while blood oozed from a wound on the right side of his neck. Employes of the hotel were called by the frightened guests, but the frenzied physician held the colored porters at bay by threatening them with the razor.

The police were notified and Officers Casserley, McGuire and Morse were dispatched to the hotel by Sergeant Mattocks. The presence of the armed policemen seemed to enrage the man, and whenever they made an attempt to seize him he would place the razor to his neck and then make a lunge at the officers.

Finally, after the policemen had watched the man closely, he glaring wildly at them, Officer Casserly hit on an idea that won victory for the policemen.

Casserley seized a chair, and when Rigs lowered the razor from his head Casserley thrust the chair into the doctor's face and backed him into a corner. As quick as a flash the other officers jumped on the insane man.

Normal Schools.

St. Cloud.—County normal schools for those counties large enough to support them is the solution offered to the present crowded condition of the state normal schools by J. W. Olsen, state superintendent. The St. Cloud normal school is overcrowded and the others are nearly filled to their capacity. But not all of the teachers of the state are normal graduates and many cannot attend because of the distance from the school.

Supt. Olsen's suggestion is to take a portion of the school to the vicinity of the pupils by having a school in the county, where a limited course may be offered, sufficient to raise the standard of instruction. He suggests that this course be given in the same school as may be established for the county agricultural schools authorized by the last legislature.

Convicted.

Gen. C. C. Andrews, state forestry commissioner, received word from C. J. Dodge, county attorney of Carlton county, of the conviction of Jack Tischart at Carlton on a charge of negligence in setting a forest fire that endangered the village of Wrenshall. Tischart was sentenced to pay a fine of $50. In default of payment he was committed to the county jail.

Tischart was employed by the contractor building the new line of the Soo road which is headed for Duluth. He was at work clearing up the right-of-way and started the fire to burn up some of the slashings and debris which had accumulated on the right-of-way. The fire got beyond his control, and started a conflagration which, for a while, threatened to wipe out Wrenshall.

NEWS NOTES.

Brainerd.—The local Y. M. C. A. is conducting an energetic campaign for membership, and it is expected that at least 250 new members will be added to the association by Sept. 26.

St. Paul.—The prosecution of several hunters who violated Minnesota hunting laws last year has had the effect of increasing the number of licenses issued to out-of-the-state hunters.

Minneapolis.—Paul Gath of Langdon, reported to the police that he had been drugged and robbed in a room over a saloon near Fourth avenue S. and Third street.

Melrose.—When Nic Meyer came downtown he found that burglars had entered his clothing store and got away with about $500 worth of goods, mostly jewelry.

Minneapolis.—President Cyrus Northrop of University of Minnesota makes public the fact that he tutored William Howard Taft at Yale and gives his opinions.

REAL WOMAN MINER

CALIFORNIA GIRL IS WORKING CLAIM IN NEVADA.

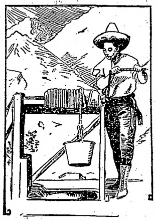
Miss Laura White of San Francisco Gives Up Society for Life of Prospector—Has Been Eminently Successful.

Reno, Nev.—This state can boast of having a real woman miner, not a mere prospector, but a handsome young woman, who actively engages in working every day in bringing the rich gold-bearing ore to the surface.

It is not often that a beautiful girl will give up gay society in the city to undertake the hardships of a mining camp in the dreary sage brush desert, and seek for the hidden ledges of golden ore. There are girls who are born with the belief that they are destined to accomplish in life more than to spend the time in mere social pleasure and in becoming belles of fashion. Miss Laura Marguerite White of San Francisco is one of them.

This young woman—only 22 years of age—was very recently lured by the "call of the desert," and left the gay whirl of social life for that of the prospector and miner in the wide gold fields of Nevada. And she has been eminently successful.

Just about 12 months ago Wilmot White, a brother of the daring girl, and Richard Cole, his partner, went down to Nevada to seek the precious metal. Finally the young fellows drifted into the Funeral range, on the eastern border of the famous Death Valley, prospected for a time and located a number of claims.



Miss White at Her Daily Task.

Young White often wrote to his sister, telling her of the desert life and of the lonely solitude of the mining camp. These letters wrought on both the sympathies and imagination of the young woman, and she finally determined to join him. She reached Reno all right, and, with little delay, made her way finally into the dreary Funeral mountains, performing the journey across the sage brush and sandy wastes on muleback and on foot. On reaching her brother's camp he was surprised and overjoyed at seeing her.

Miss White donned the rough clothes of a woman prospector, and tramped for several weeks over the rugged hills, and at last discovered a rich cropping. She located several claims, and then called on her brother to help her work them. On one of these claims a rich vein was discovered. It required depth to work it to good advantage. Cole was busy with the other properties, but White assisted his sister, and, together they are working the claim, which, later, turned out to be very rich.

When considerable depth was reached on the ledge, White worked at the bottom of the shaft while his sister toiled at the windlass. She soon found the skirts of her prospecting suit too restricting, so she adopted the regulation clothes of the miner.

Now, Miss White has so adapted herself to her rude surroundings, that day after day she toils steadily at her task hoisting the ore, partaking heartily of the plain rought miners' food, and sleeping in a little canvas tent. This seems all the more singular as she is a young woman of exceptional beauty and refinement.

Though tall and slender, Miss Laura is possessed of remarkable endurance. Toiling at the windlass steadily, clad in her rough man's mining clothes, a wealth of wavy brown hair half hidden under a Mexican sombrero, her blue eyes sparkling as each glittering load is hoisted to the surface, she looks the embodiment of perfect health and happiness.

Household Reform.

The reform that applies itself to the household must not be partial. It must correct the whole system of our social living. It must come with plain living and high thinking; it must break up caste, and put domestic service on another foundation. It must come in connection with a true acceptance by each man of his vocation, not chosen by his parents or friends, but by his genius, with earnestness and love.—Emerson.

Halley's Comet in 1910.

From calculations made by Prof H. C. Wilson, which are quoted in Nature, there seems reason to suppose that the conditions under which Halley's comet will return to us in 1910 will be much the same as those under which it appeared in 1066. It was then one of the grandest objects which ever appeared in the heavens, and made a tremendous impression upon the mediaeval world.

ONE KIDNEY GONE

But Cured After Doctors Said There Was No Hope.

Sylvanus O. Verrill, Milford, Me., says: "Five years ago a bad injury paralyzed me and affected my kidneys. My back hurt me terribly, and the urine was badly discolored. Doctors said my right kidney was practically dead. They said I could never walk again. I read of Doan's Kidney Pills and began using them. One box made me stronger and freer from pain. I kept on using them and in three months was able to get out on crutches, and the kidneys were acting better. I improved rapidly, discarded the crutches and to the wonder of my friends was soon completely cured."

TOO TRUE TO BE GOOD.

The Widower Peck—Would it be too much trouble to—er—change it a bit in that respect?

A Carlyle Wedding.

Craigenputtock, where Carlyle's "Sartor Resartus" was written, has just been the scene of a notable wedding. The bride was Mary Carlyle of Craigenputtock, a grandniece of Thomas Carlyle, a farmer, of Pingle, Dumfriesshire, a son of Thomas Carlyle's favorite nephew. Pingle is about four miles from Ecclefechan, Carlyle's birthplace, and this village is the original of the Entuphl of "Sartor Resartus."—London Standard.

HELPFUL ADVICE

You won't tell your family doctor the whole story about your private illness—you are too modest. You need not be afraid to tell Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., the things you could not explain to the doctor. Your letter will be held in the strictest confidence. From her vast correspondence with sick women during the past thirty years she may have gained the very knowledge that will help your case. Such letters as the following, from grateful women, establish beyond a doubt the power of to conquer all female diseases.

Mrs. Norman R. Barndt, of Allentown, Pa., writes:

"Ever since I was sixteen years of age I had suffered from an organic derangement and female weakness; in consequence I had dreadful headaches and was extremely nervous. My physician said I must go through an operation to get well. A friend told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I took it and wrote you for advice, following your directions carefully, and thanks to you I am today a well woman, and I am telling all my friends of my experience."

FACTS FOR SICK WOMEN.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has positively cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration.

The General Demand

of the Well-Informed of the World has always been for a simple, pleasant and efficient liquid laxative remedy of known value; a laxative which physicians could sanction for family use because its component parts are known to them to be wholesome and truly beneficial in effect, acceptable to the system and gentle, yet prompt, in action.

In supplying that demand with its excellent combination of Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, the California Fig Syrup Co. proceeds along ethical lines and relies on the merits of the laxative for its remarkable success.

That is one of many reasons why Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna is given the preference by the Well-Informed. To get its beneficial effects always buy the genuine—manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., only, and for sale by all leading druggists. Price fifty cents per bottle.

LEST HE FORGET.

No Roseate Postcard Without Its Thorn of Suggestion.

Harold's mother—we'll call him Harold—went abroad a month ago, leaving Harold under the somewhat unsubstantial control of his elder sisters.

In spite of the itemized directions with which even unto the moment of final leave-taking she had not ceased to bombard him, Harold's mother was far from sure that her efforts would have any lasting effect.

Her voyage was more or less disturbed by these doubts, but before she landed on the other side she had determined on a course of action. Like all small boys, Harold is most covetous of picture postcards and had looked forward to a harvest from his mother's trip. He got it.

Every day she sent at least one card. And whatever else it bore in the way of inscription, there was not one which failed of this introduction:

"Just as soon as you get this go and brush your teeth."

EGOISM.

Mistress—Bridget, it always seems to me that the crankiest mistresses get the best cooks.

Cook—Ah, go on wid yer blarney!

Nailing Him.

He—It's jolly nice to kiss one you like.

She—(No answer).

He—That is, of course, if she doesn't mind.

She—(No answer).

He—If she gets mad it's altogether another thing.

She—(No answer).

He—I'd like to steal a kiss now—

She—(No answer).

He—If it would be quite safe.

She—Have you finished?

He—Oh, yes!

She—Then how can you make so many fool remarks when you see that I am alone and entirely at your mercy?—Young's Magazine.

Populous China.

The population of the Chinese empire is largely a matter of estimate. There has never been such census of the empire as that which is taken every decade in this country. But the estimate of the Almanach de Gotha for 1900 may be taken as fairly reliable. According to that estimate, the population of the empire is, in round numbers, about 400,000,000. It is probably safe to say that if the human beings on earth were stood up in line every fourth one would be a Chinaman.

AFRAID TO EAT.

Girl Starving on Ill-Selected Food.

"Several years ago I was actually starving," writes a Me. girl, "yet dared not eat for fear of the consequences.

"I had suffered from indigestion from overwork, irregular meals and improper food until at last my stomach became so weak I could eat scarcely any food without great distress.

"Many kinds of food were tried, all with the same discouraging effects. I steadily lost health and strength until I was but a wreck of my former self.

"Having heard of Grape-Nuts and its great merits, I purchased a package, but with little hope that it would help me—I was so discouraged.

"I found it not only appetizing but that I could eat it as I liked and that it satisfied the craving for food without causing distress, and if I may use the expression, 'it filled the bill.'

"For months Grape-Nuts was my principal article of diet. I felt from the very first that I had found the right way to health and happiness, and my anticipations were fully realized.

"With its continued use I regained my usual health and strength. To-day I am well and can eat anything I like, yet Grape-Nuts food forms a part of my bill of fare." "There's a Reason."

Cupid as Jockey

By Anna McClure Sholl

(Copyright, by Shortstory Pub. Co.)

Rich and eccentric Mr. Sears had always delighted in setting the little town of Upwater by the ears, but no one dreamed of a post-mortem chuckle from the old gentleman. It came in the form of a bequest in his will—$1,000 to the prettiest woman in the place, the judges to be chosen from the elderly married men of the community.

The hubbub was instantaneous, and of a nature to warm the heart of a cynic. Mothers spoke jealously of the charms of their daughters. The ministers prepared sermons against the sin of vanity thus flagrantly encouraged by the late Mr. Sears. The "best people" signalized their intention of standing aloof from the contest. But at last a reaction set in, started by someone's saving sense of humor, and it was almost unanimously decided that the terms of the will must be complied with. An appointed committee fixed upon a day in June for the assembling of the contestants. They were to come in their best apparel, and to abide by the vote of the judges "without murmurings or disputings." The contest was to be held out of doors, in the sunny garden of one of the grandees of the town, that the searching light of day might add to the impartiality of the decision. The affair was thus turned into a lawn-party, and, the first families agreeing to be present, the rest of the town followed suit.

A week before the day appointed, Richard Gordon, a young lawyer, went to call upon Mary Bennett, whose father before his invalidism had been a professor in the college town from which Gordon's family also came. Richard, waiting for Mary in the dim parlor with its steel engravings of famous pictures, felt that the girl's life was somehow like them, beautiful in line and form, but lacking the color that selfishness, rather than self-denial, seems to impart to human existence. She had always sacrificed herself to the demands and needs of others, until she was like a white flower brought out of the sunshine to cheer a sick-room.

He was absorbed in his thoughts of her when she entered, a welcome glowing in her eyes. Though she was tall and straight and wholesome to look upon, no one had ever called her pretty. Her chief asset was her abundant dark hair. Richard had never thought of her being in the contest, so he did not even apologize when, after a few moments' conversation, he showed her a list he had made of the women who, in his opinion, had the best chance of winning—a list from which her name was omitted.

"I see that you have headed it with Bertha Klendenning. That is easy to understand."

"But my grounds are different from most people's," he said, with the earnestness that he always brought to any subject which interested him. "Her blue eyes and yellow hair and story-book complexion count very little. It's her lovely figure and her charm of manner—her more subtle advantages, so to speak—that make her what she is, graceful and womanly."

"I quite agree with you. Who is next on the list?"

"Katherine More—it's the curve of her upper lip," he added, confidentially.

"And next?"

"Dora."

"Because—?"

He laughed.

"It has something to do with the tip of her nose."

"I quite understand. Dora's nose will keep her young when she's 50."

"And then come the ladies who have only to put on a pink ribbon to be called pretty. You see my scorn of them places them last."

"Poor things! Well, I think it will be Bertha. You must tell me all about it afterwards!"

"But, my dear, you're surely going!" he said, earnestly, knitting his boyish brows.

"I can't unless father is better."

"Oh, you must—it will amuse you so! I'll call for you to make sure!"

She spent a troubled week, trying to come to terms with herself. In her dark moments she had perversely wished to make herself look as plain as possible, taking a kind of pride in being utterly out of the running; but with the first dawn of gentler feeling came the desire to look her best, and to enter into the spirit of the occasion.

So when the time came she curled her hair and arranged it with all the art that she could command. She put on a soft, white summer gown and a picture hat with roses. She was drawing on her long gloves when Richard arrived. He seemed in the highest spirits.

"I was prepared to use force, if I found you backing out. I have some news to tell you about myself—something that's made me very glad, and I want you to be glad with me."

Her heart sank. Was he going to tell her of his engagement to Bertha? She turned a pale face to him.

"Can't you guess, Mary?"

But she was dumb. He leaned towards her and took both her hands in his.

"I've got the position I wanted in the office with Jenkins & Bart—and it's a kind of partnership, Mary. It's easily worth five thousand a year."

She drew a long breath of relief and looked at him with shining eyes.

"I'm so glad—so glad!"

"You can't be so glad as I, because, my dear—" he hesitated. Her sudden little flame of joy again sank.

"You see I didn't want to speak until I was sure—"

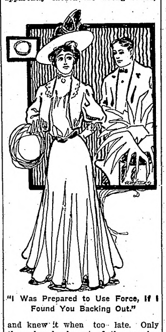
Even then she would not believe. She had turned her head away. Was it Bertha—oh, was it Bertha?

"You see I've loved you always—why Mary—!"

Then she turned a rapturous face toward him.

How they reached the appointed place she never knew. She walked on air, surrounded by a ring of gold that inclosed one other person. Her eyes shone. A bright color came to her cheeks. Richard, excited and triumphant, looked at her adoringly, seeing in her at once the woman of his future and the playmate of his childhood. They would show themselves at the contest for a minute, just to be public-spirited. Then they would go for a heavenly ramble in the woods.

The judges had decided to make the award after mingling informally with their towns-people, so there was no set ceremony, no drawing-up of the contestants. People strolled about or talked together in groups, as at a garden party. Here and there a girl was seen whose heightened color betrayed her consciousness of being under scrutiny, for it was generally known that the courteous judges, chatting casually with their friends and acquaintances, were all the while gleaning impressions which would be of service in making the decision. The occasion, on the whole, did not seem favorable to the setting forth of feminine charm. Even Bertha, by becoming self-conscious, had lost something of her usual grace. Katherine's pretty bow of a mouth showed a disposition to straighten, and Dora's infantile nose failed to save the day for her. As for the young women whose charm depended on pink ribbons, they had all apparently chosen the wrong colors, and knew it when too late. Only those hopelessly out of the running seemed to be really enjoying themselves.



"I Was Prepared to Use Force, If I Found You Backing Out."

It was expected that the judges would not remain out long, but a half hour went by, and they were still debating in the little summer house to which they had withdrawn. A feeling of uneasiness began to make itself apparent. Bets were canceled, and rearranged again. No one seemed as confident as at the opening of the contest. At last the judges were seen to rise, and then, two by two, they came across the lawn, and took their places on a flower-decked platform. A sudden hush fell over the assembly. The chairman waited until everyone had come within hearing distance of the stand before making his announcement, then, after reading the clause in the will, he said:

"The difficulties in the way of a fair decision can hardly be appreciated by those not members of the committee. In the making of it, in the judging and weighing, we crave your clemency. Having made it we are sure of your enthusiastic support. The prize has been awarded to Miss Mary Bennett."

There was a confused murmur. Richard, more surprised than anyone, turned to look at Mary. It was true! It might be gone to-morrow, but today her radiant joy made her the most beautiful woman there. She seemed all light and color and happiness, and they had felt it and recorded it.

She would not believe it at first, and wanted to hurry away, but they detained her and showered congratulations on her until she was glowing like a rose. Each moment enriched her, adding weight to the decision.

"You were a dark horse," said a friend, at once puzzled and convinced.

"Cupid was jockey," said Richard.

AVOID RISK IN BUYING PAINT.

You take a good deal of risk if you buy white lead without having absolute assurance as to its purity and quality. You know white lead is often adulterated, often misrepresented. But there's no need at all to take any chances. The "Dutch Boy Painter" trade mark of the National Lead Company, the largest makers of genuine white lead, on a package of White Lead, is a positive guarantee of purity and quality. It's as dependable as the Dollar Sign. If you'll write the National Lead Company, Woodbridge Bldg., New York City, they will send you a simple and certain outfit for testing white lead, and a valuable book on paint, free.

WHEN YOU GET RICH.

Only Then Are You Appreciated for Your True Worth.

"It is pleasant to be rich," he said. "Nobody can deny that. Many of the pleasures of wealth, though, are false and mistaken ones.

"When I was making my living by the composition of blood and thunder tales for boys—and I could turn out my 8,000 words a day—I knew a pale, bent, ink-stained old chap who wrote love stories.

"His stories did not pay; he was very poor; but an aunt died, and suddenly the old fellow found himself a millionaire.

"He saw me one afternoon on Broadway. He stopped his red car and we chatted about old times.

"'And is it pleasant to be rich?' I asked.

"'Yes, it is,' he answered, as he lighted a Vuelto Abajos and handed me another. 'And do you know what is the pleasantest thing about it? You have an opportunity to make real friends, friends who can understand you. You get at last to know people capable of esteeming you for your own qualities alone. You find, sir, that you are at last appreciated.'"

DEEP CRACKS FROM ECZEMA

Could Lay Slate-Pencil in One—Hands in Dreadful State—Permanent Cure in Cuticura.

"I had eczema on my hands for about seven years and during that time I had used several so-called remedies, together with physicians' and druggists' prescriptions. The disease was so bad on my hands that I could lay a slate-pencil in one of the cracks and a rule placed across the hand would not touch the pencil. I kept using remedy after remedy, and while some gave partial relief, none relieved as much as did the first box of Cuticura Ointment. I made a purchase of Cuticura Soap and Ointment and my hands were perfectly cured after two boxes of Cuticura Ointment and one cake of Cuticura Soap were used. W. H. Dean, Newark, Del., Mar. 28, 1907."

Sale of Ditching Jobs.

Notice is hereby given, That on the 12th day of October 1908, at one o'clock P. M., at the office of the county Auditor in the city of Red Lake Falls, Minnesota, I will sell the jobs of digging and constructing the Ditch No. 31 of Red Lake County, established by the Board of County Commissioners of Red Lake County State of Minesota, by their order bearing date September 18th 1908, viz: For the work as one job, and also for one or more sections of 100 feet each, and also for one or more of the construction jobs, each of said sections to be known and numbered by stakes as shown by the report of the engineer in said matter, commencing at the one including the outlet, and from thence, successively up stream to the one including the source said sections being numbered from station "0" to station 268 inclusive, to the lowest responsible bidder or bidders, and that bids are invited for said work; said work to be completed within the time required, and in the manner specified, in said engineer's report And no bid will be entertained which exceeds more than thirty (30) per cent. over and above the estimate cost of the construction, in any case, as stated in the said order; and the successful bidder will be required to give a satisfactory bond, to be approved by the Auditor of said county, with two freehold sureties, for the faithful performance and fulfilment of his contract, and to pay all damages that may accrue by reason of his failure to complete the job within the time required in the contract. The said order and estimates and profile are on file and may be seen at my office.

The approximate amount of work to be done in the construction of said ditch is as follows:

The excavation and removal of 50,921 cubic yards of earth. Under the head of excavation shall be included all excavation required for the formation of the ditch, the altering of the highways or private roads, and excavation connected in any way with the proper construction of said ditch, and the hauling and depositing of the material excavated so as to form a turnpike or grade along the west side of said ditch from section 20 to section 79-15 inclusive, and from station 79-15 to station 131-95. The grade or turnpike shall be upon the north side of the ditch, and from station 131-95 to station 268 the material excavated shall be placed along the west side of the ditch. The engineer reserves the right to change the place of the excavation along the ditch as the occasion or conditions may require at any time during the progress of the work.

The estimated cost of the work is $8,363.12.

All bids must be accompanied by a certified check payable to the Auditor of said county, for not less than ten per cent. of the amount of each bid.

The right to reject any and all bids is hereby reserved.

Dated September 22nd, 1908.

JOHN B. O'BRIEN,
County Auditor Red Lake County.

Announcement.

I hereby announce my candidacy for the Democratic nomination for the office of Sheriff of Red Lake county. If nominated and elected I will pledge myself to conduct the duties of the office in an absolutely fair and impartial manner according to law, and the best of my ability. I respectfully solicit your vote and support in my candidacy.

Yours very truly,
J. W. McGINTY.

Arms, Legs and the Man.

How many of us have noticed that we walk with our arms as well as with our legs? Sitting on a grassy slope overlooking a seaside promenade I was struck by the mechanical swing of the arms of the stream of passersby—the right arm always keeping position with the left leg and the left arm with the right leg. By attempting to reverse the order of the swing I found that I had a tendency to progress like a crab, while the effort to keep them fixed by the side was like the shutting off the steam from the engine. Arms and the man must be amended to arms, legs and the man!—London Chronicle.

Dangerous.

Giles—How's your son gettin' on up in Lunnon? Garge—Very well. He tells me he's got a job partly behind the counter and partly out o' doors. Giles—And what 'appens when the door slams?—London Telegraph.

Makes Cowards of Us All.

There is nothing from which even the bravest man shrinks so pitifully as the lancet of the surgeon, even when it is wielded by the most skillful of his craft.—London Sketch.

TURKISH ARMY OFFICERS.

They Are Neither Loved Nor Respected by Their Men.

Very seldom if he can help it does the Turkish army officer appear on horseback, and when not on duty he looks upon his horse merely as a method of locomotion. He has no affection or understanding for the horse. The superior officers have no horses of their own, and, being generally bad riders and without military qualities which would raise them in the estimation of their men, they are neither loved nor respected by them. Married officers keep entirely to themselves, such things as invitations to one another's houses being unknown, and the only occasions upon which officers meet together at all are on the days of assembly, when they are called together for the sultan's birthday or accession celebrations.

The pay of the lower ranks is as small as that of the superior officers is high. The young cavalry officer who makes a good impression on his entry into the service soon falls to pieces through want of occupation either of mind or body. The greater part of the morning and evening he sits over his coffee and cards or dominoes. There are but few newspapers, and those that do exist are so severely censored by the government that they contain little but weather statistics, gazettes and announcements of the bestowal of decorations.

What the Turkish officer really thoroughly enjoys is a gramophone. Instruments playing the waltzes and reproducing the music hall songs of all the cities of Europe are in the greatest possible request, chiefly because they make music without any personal trouble.—Chicago News.

A PRECARIOUS EXISTENCE.

Mental Tribulations of the Superstitious Woman.

The superstitious woman started to go downtown, but found that she had forgotten something. It was hard work to get her to go back for it, but when she did sat down for a few minutes to "take the curse off" before going out again. On the sidewalk she passed a cross eyed man and had hard work to keep from spitting three times over her left shoulder. The first car that came along was No. 13. She let it go by and waited eight minutes for another. On the way downtown she remarked to a friend that she "had been in excellent health lately." Instantly she was obliged to loose her glove and rub her bare palm on the wood of the bench before her. As she and her friend were walking on Twenty-third street some thoughtless person darted between them. The superstitious woman was much disturbed and worried over the thought of a coming separation.

That night her husband upset the saltcellar. She insisted on his taking a pinch of the salt and throwing it over his shoulder. When she disrobed for the night she discovered that she had been wearing one stocking wrong side out all day. It was the sign of good luck, and it allowed her to go to bed happy. But some time in the night a dog howled dismally under her window. From that moment she has been looking for a calamity. Nothing will make her believe that there will not soon be a death in her immediate family.—St. Louis Republic.

When the Noise Let Up.

Two young women of stolid, common sense appearance were the sole feminine occupants of a subway car until there entered a flashily dressed girl, with face made up like a cosmetic advertisement and accompanied by a young man attired in the "extreme." The two young women eyed the new comer with interest while they continued their conversation. The train slowed down at the next station, the rattle and bang of operation ceased and the voice of one of the young women became suddenly audible:

"If I had a face like that, do you know what I'd do? I'd hock it."

The girl with the makeup looked daggers, her escort looked foolish, the speaker looked out of the window and a dozen passengers looked as though they enjoyed it.—New York Globe.

Marlin

For shooting the swift flying, heavily feathered ducks and geese the Marlin 12-gauge repeating shotgun has no superior. This gun is exceedingly strong in construction and yet is not heavy. It is bored to throw an excellent pattern with great penetration. The solid top keeps out the weather and the brush and twigs of the blind, and the side ejector prevents the empty shells from being a nuisance to the shooter. It's the best bad weather gun.

The Marlin 12-gauge is suited to all forms of bird and trap shooting, and for durability, strength and ease of action is unexcelled. Made for both black and smokeless powders and for heavy loads. Two separate extractors make sure work.

Agricultural School Hopelessly Defeated.

At the special election held on Tuesday last the voters of Red Lake county entered a most embatilc objection to the establishing of a county school of agriculture at St. Hilaire. The taxpayers in the country districts particularly in the eastern part of the county, had no desire to have their taxes increased at the aresent time and they expressed their disapproval of the scheme with a united voice. Yesterday, with all returns in except the town of Goodridge, the vote stood: For the school, 377; against it, 1,185.

Of the 377 votes cast for the measure St. Hilaire, Thief River Falls and Red Lake Falls contributed over 200 votes which goes to prove that the farmars were almost unanimously against it.

The PIONEER, being the only paper in the county which opposed the measure, takes pleasure in congratulating the common people on the victory. Throughout this section of the county the voters turned out in goodly numbers and in precinct after precinct the vote was entirely against the proposition. In the village of Plummer and in Garnes, Equality Poplar River, Mayfield and other precincts, not a single vote was cast in favor of the school, while in numerous other townships in the eastern part the vote was against the measure almost as strongly, Deer Park gave the school one vote white 35 voted against it.

It was a dangerous measure for the people of St. Hilaire to undertake and their asking for and securing of a special election was, to say the least unwise. The people rule, and all is well.

To The Voters.

I have received the Republican nomination for the office of Register of Deeds. I am a ~~candidate for re-~~ lection. I ask a second term on the merits of my work in the office only. I invite all the voters to look over the work and see wehther or not it is satisfactory.

If you find that you can conscienciously support me at the coming election I will greatly appreciate your vote and any good word that you may say in my behalf.

Very truly yours,
E. L. QUIST.

Color.

Of the light rays that fall upon an object some are taken up by the object and others are reflected. It is to the reflected rays that we are to turn for the explanation of color. For instance, a sheet of white paper is "white" because all the seven kinds of light are reflected from its surface, while the sunflower is "yellow" because when light falls on it the violet, indigo, blue and green rays are selected for absorption, and yellow principally is reflected. The reflective rays, received by the eye, produce the sensation of color. This is an explanation of nearly all the colors that exist.

Poison Hemlock.

Water hemlock is a deadly plant common in most country neighborhoods. Its roots are eaten often in spring by mistake for some edible root, and death frequently results. Cattle are often poisoned by drinking water in marshes where it grows. The poison hemlock from which the Greeks made poisons is a near relative to the water hemlock. It stands from two to seven feet high and has clusters of small white flowers and large, parsleylike leaves. The stalk, being hollow, is often made into whistles by country boys, and many children are poisoned in this fashion.

Handicapped.

"What profession do you think our boy Joe had better adopt?" asked Mrs. Brown.

"I dunno," answered her husband. "Joe is rather handicapped by circumstances. The only profession he's naturally adapted to is that of a capitalist, and I don't quite see where he's goin' to get the money."

All commissioners voting aye.

On motion duly carried the Board adjourned sine dine.

(SEAL) C. A. LINDQUIST,
Chairman Board of County Comm'rs of Red Lake County, Minnesota.
Attest: JOHN B. O'BRIEN,
County Auditor and Ex-officio Clerk of Board.

Red Lake Falls, Minnesota,
September 18th, 1908.

On the call of the County Auditor, pursuant to the provisions of Chapter 230 of the Laws of 1905 and acts amendatory thereof, the Board of County Commissioners of Red Lake County, met at the office of the County Auditor in special session at one o'clock p. m. for the purpose of hearing and considering the petition of L. T. Bergh and others for the establishment and construction of a county ditch No. 31 in said county and for the consideration of the reports of the engineer and viewers thereon, Commissioners present: Lindquist, Demann, Shaw, Aubol and Pigeon.

Commissioners absent: None.

The said petition was read and the arguments of all persons interested were heard. On motion made by Shaw seconded by Demann and carried unanimously, the report of the engineer and viewers were accepted, and the following order establishing County Ditch No. 31 was made:

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Red Lake, ss.

In the matter of the petition of L. T. Bergh for a public ditch in the county of Red Lake, State of Minnesota, designated and numbered as county ditch No. 31, the above entitled matter came on duly before the Board of County Commissioners of the County of Red Lake, State of Minnesota, at a special meeting of said Board duly called for the purpose of hearing and considering the petition for said ditch in the above entitled matter, on the 18th day of September A. D. 1908, at one o'clock p. m. of said day, and it appearing by proper evidence that due notice had been given of the pendency of said petition and of the time of hearing thereon, and that C. H. Martz, the civil engineer, appointed by the Board to survey the route of said ditch has completed his work and filed his report thereon in the omce of the County Auditor of said county, and that the viewers appointed by said Board to view and report upon said work have duly completed their labors and made and filed their report in due form of law in the office of said County Auditor, the said Board of County Commissioners did, at the time above specified proceed to hear said petition and said viewers report thereon, and said Board having duly considered said petition and heard all the parties interested for or against the construction of said ditch and all other matters pertaining thereto, find as follows to-wit:

First: That the said civil engineer has completed his work and made and filed his report thereon in all respects according to law.

Second: That the viewers appointed therein have duly completed their labors and have made and filed their report thereon according to law.

Third: That the estimated benefits to be derived from the construction of said work are greater than the total costs, including damages awarded.

Fourth: That the damages and benefits arising from the construction of said ditch have been duly awarded and assessed, and that said work will be of public utility and promote the public health and that said reports of said engineer and viewers are complete and correct.

Fifth: That notice of this hearing of said petition and of said viewers report and said engineer's report has been duly given, published, and posted and mailed as by law required, and that proofs of said service of said notice have been duly made and filed in the office of the County Auditor of said County, and that all other proceedings in the matter have been made and taken in accordance with the provisions of law.

NOW THEREFORE, As conclusions from the foregoing findings, we, the Board of County Commissioners of the County of Red Lake, State of Minnesota, at said special session of said Board, held at the time above specified, being satisfied that the proposed ditch will be of public utility and conducive to public health and public benefit and convenience do hereby locate and establish said ditch according to the report and the specifications of said civil engineer made and filed therein, and do hereby establish and confirm the report of the viewers made and filed therein.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, That the damages awarded to the persons and corporations named in the viewers report therein, in excess of benefits be paid out of the County Treasury of said County, on warrants to be drawn and attested by the County Auditor of said County and signed by the Chairman of this Board of County Commissioners, and delivered to the persons entitled thereto as provided by law.

Given under our hands this 18th day of September, A. D. 1908.

By the Board.
(SEAL) C. A. LINDQUIST,
Chairman, Board of County Comm'rs of Red Lake County, Minnesota.
Attest: JOHN B. O'BRIEN,
County Auditor and Ex-officio Clerk of Board.

Red Lake Falls, Minnesota, Sept. 26th, 1908.

The County Board of Red Lake County, Minnesota, met pursuant to call issued by the County Auditor Sept. 8th, 1908, under section 337, Revised Laws of 1905, requiring the County Board to meet at the office of the County Auditor in the City of Red Lake Falls, Minnesota, at eleven o'clock A. M. to consider the County removal petition now on file in the County Auditors office to remove the County seat from the city of Red Lake Falls to the city of Thief River Falls.

Members present, Aubol and Shaw.

Members absent, Lindqist, Deman, and Pigeon.

Commissioners Aubol and Shaw remained here until twelve o'clock and took a recess until one o'clock P. M. Commissioners Aubol and Shaw convened at one o'clock P. M.

Motion made by Shaw seconded by Aubol that we adjourn for want of a quorum. Motion carried.

Chairman Board County Comm'rs
Attest:
JOHN B. O'BRIEN,
[Seal] County Auditor and ex-officio Clerk of Board.

A Friend In Need.

A speaker in the recent Shropshire (England) election relates the ~~following incident~~: One night he spoke in the poultry market at Whitchurch. The next morning a young man stopped him in the street and said:

"I was looking well after you last night."

The speaker expressed surprise at the necessity.

The young man continued his story: "I saw a young man come into the meeting with his coat pockets bulging out in a way that made me suspicious. Two of us followed him in. He stood at the back of the room, and we stood one on each side of him. Gently but firmly we pressed against him. There was a faint crackling sound of breaking eggs, and the man was out of action."

HASKELL GETS OUT; MAY SUE PRESIDENT

Democratic National Treasurer Resigns Because of Charges--Lively Controversy Engaged in by Governor of Oklahoma, William J. Bryan and Mr. Roosevelt.

Chicago.—Charles N. Haskell of Oklahoma resigned as treasurer of the Democratic national committee shortly after midnight Friday night following a protracted conference with Judge Wade of Iowa and Josephus Daniels, director of the Democratic publicity bureau.

In his letter of resignation, which was addressed to Chairman Norman E. Mack of the national committee, Gov. Haskell denied the charges made against him by William Randolph Hearst and President Roosevelt. He said he resigned in order that nothing should be permitted to cloud the real issues in the campaign and because he desired Mr. Bryan's election.

May Sue Roosevelt.

Gov. Haskell formally announced, both in his letter and in a subsequent interview, that he would treat his accusers, including President Roosevelt, as private citizens and would subject them to the penalties of the law.

It was gathered from his general statement that he intended to institute suits for libel against both Mr. Hearst and the president. He charged that Hearst, President Roosevelt and three Wall street brokers were behind the attack on him.

Haskell's Letter of Resignation.

Gov. Haskell's letter of resignation follows:

Hon. Norman E. Mack, Chairman Democratic National Committee, New York City—My Dear Sir: In pursuance of information as to your date for return here, when I went home before, I assumed I would find you here upon my return today. I now learn that you will be detained in the east until Tuesday, and as I must be home on Monday I leave tomorrow.

Since the president and his cabinet have joined forces with Mr. Hearst and three Wall street brokers to make a personal fight against me, notwithstanding the president in his answer to Mr. Bryan abandoned his charge about Ohio Standard Oil cases, yet by all the means at the command of the government and the millions of Hearst and his Wall street allies, they persist in vicious, unwarranted, and untruthful attack on me. Personally, I welcome their attack, and shall meet it with all the vigor at my command, I shall treat them all as private citizens and subject to the penalties of the law which they merit.

In this I know I shall have the aid of my neighbors at home for all proper purposes; but my time must be free from other demands here. Again, my heart is full of hope for the election of Bryan and Kern. Honest government and rule by the people is at stake.

Important beyond any battle at the polls in the last generation is the pending contest.

I would not for one moment consider remaining in any way connected with the committee, therefore hereby tender my resignation as treasurer of the Democratic national committee, that not the slightest contest of my own could in any way be used by the president to cloud the sky and shield our opponents from discussing the real issues and laying bare the Republican duplicity to the people.

Sincerely yours,
CHARLES N. HASKELL.

Bryan Reproves President.

Detroit, Mich.—The remarkable spectacle of a presidential candidate rebuking the chief executive of the nation for making statements deemed to be unjustified, was witnessed here when William J. Bryan in a letter to President Roosevelt defended Gov. Haskell of Oklahoma, treasurer of the Democratic national committee, against the charge that he had unlawful connections with the Standard Oil Company. Mr. Bryan serves notice on the president that as the candidate of the Democratic party "I shall not permit any responsible member of the Republican organization to misrepresent the Democratic party in the present campaign."

The letter concludes with the statement that the Democratic party is making "an honest and honorable" fight in defense of its principles and policies, and expects and will demand honorable treatment from those who are in charge of the Republican campaign."

Roosevelt's Hot Reply.

Washington.—President Roosevelt, following upon a prolonged conference with members of the cabinet at the White House, prepared and gave out his reply to William J. Bryan, the Democratic candidate, relative to W. R. Hearst's charges that Gov. Haskell, treasurer of the Democratic campaign committee, had represented Standard Oil interests both in Ohio and Oklahoma.

Mr. Bryan had demanded proof of the charges, promising that in the event of their substantiation Gov. Haskell would be eliminated from the campaign.

Dismissing the Ohio case, which involved an allegation of attempted bribery, with the explanation that he had made no direct charge against Gov. Haskell as regards that particular instance, President Roosevelt takes up the matter of the Prairie State Oil & Gas Company, and argues that Gov. Haskell's action in stopping legal proceedings brought by the attorney general of Oklahoma demonstrates conclusively that he was controlled by the great corporation to which the Oklahoma company was subsidiary.

After contrasting Mr. Bryan's defense of Gov. Haskell with Judge Taft's repudiation of Foraker in connection with the Hearst charges against the Ohio senator, the president proceeds to declare that Gov. Haskell's "utter unfitness for association with any man anxious to appeal to the American people on a moral issue, has been abundantly shown by other acts of his as governor of Oklahoma."

The president condemns Gov. Haskell's conduct in connection with various matters as disgraceful and scandalous, and calls special attention to what he describes as "prostituting to base purposes the state university."

Bryan to Roosevelt.

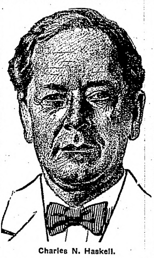
Milwaukee.—Defending Gov. Haskell against the charges which have been brought against him "until the charges can be examined in some court where partisanship does not bias," William Jennings Bryan, Democratic candidate for president, on his way from Madison to this city, gave out for publication his reply to President Roosevelt's recent letter, in response to his telegram on the subject.

Mr. Bryan speaks of the election of Mr. Haskell as governor of Oklahoma, and says that "the constitution was adopted and Gov. Haskell was elected in spite of the efforts of your administration and in spite of the speeches made in Oklahoma by Mr. Taft."

Mr. Bryan charges, among other things, that the steel trust "with your express consent" purchased one of its largest rivals and thus obtained control of more than 50 per cent. of the total output. He asked the president if he will insist that "in permitting this you showed less favor to the monopolistic corporations than I do in opposing it."



Charles N. Haskell.

President Hits Back at Bryan.

Washington.—President Roosevelt gave out a statement Sunday night that severely scores William J. Bryan and the Democratic party. It was called forth by the criticism of the president, Mr. Taft, and the Republican party's platform by Mr. Bryan.

In answering Mr. Bryan's claim that the Democratic party will pursue the anti-trust prosecutions more vigorously, Mr. Roosevelt asks a comparison of what the two parties have done when in power, pointing out that the last Democratic administration, that in which Mr. Olney was attorney general, instituted but four such cases, two of which failed and a third of which was decided by Mr. Taft in favor of the government.

In comparison to this is the record of the present administration with its mass of anti-trust and rebate cases, the vast majority of the decisions being convictions.

Haskell Ungently Handled.

The last part of the statement is given over to a denunciation of the political life of Gov. Haskell and the manner in which Mr. Bryan accepted the Oklahoman's service and defended him, even after the accusations against him became public. Mr. Roosevelt mentions many of the shortcomings of which he says Haskell is guilty and declares there are many others not enumerated.

Those specifically mentioned are:

That Haskell, as governor of Oklahoma, gave illegal privileges to the Prairie Oil & Gas Company, a subsidiary of the Standard Oil trust.

That he secured title to town lots in Muskogee, Okla., by fraud, drawing them by the use of a "dummy." Haskell now is under indictment on the charge, he says.

That Haskell offered a fee of $500 to an Arkansas lawyer if the latter would lobby in the Muskogee council for the passage of a certain franchise and then refused payment, although the franchise was secured.

That Haskell dodged payment of a judgment by a New York court for $42,235, and that a sheriff's execution failed to recover but $29.80 of this amount.

That Haskell was a member of the Citizens' Alliance, a body formed to fight the union workers and prevent the formation of any defensive body of laboring men.

Foraker's Hot Reply.

Cincinnati.—Senator Foraker prepared a statement which was made public Friday, replying to the recent charges made by William R. Hearst and President Roosevelt. In addition he bitterly assails Hearst, Taft and the president, charging Taft with consorting with Standard Oil magnates himself and declaring that President Roosevelt's actions indicate a guilty conscience. In the opening paragraph Mr. Foraker declared that the president showed bias in accepting as true all the charges. He denied that he acted improperly in accepting employment from the Standard Oil Company, said that there was no secret about it and produced letters to prove that after the government began its attack upon the Standard Oil, he declined to accept a retainer from them. He charged that Mr. Hearst had other letters in addition to those which he gave out, and that these other letters, if made public at the same time, would have shown how harmless was his connection with the Standard people.

Taft Answers Foraker.

Albert Lea, Minn.—William H. Taft issued a statement in denial of certain allegations made by Senator Foraker in his statement. The Republican candidate does not touch on the general defense put up by the Ohio senator, but confines himself entirely to that part of the address which directly concerns himself.

There are two of these charges and they were denied in vigorous language. Both of them were meant to show Mr. Taft at least was in sympathy with the Standard Oil crowd.

The Judge Doyle Incident.

As to the first, Mr. Taft says:

"Senator Foraker says I recommended Judge Doyle for a United States judgeship in northern Ohio and the president acquiesced in the recommendation when we knew that he was attorney for the Standard Oil Company, and argues that this is a justification for him, while a senator of the United States, in accepting professional employment from the Standard Oil Company and in making what was in effect a newspaper partnership with the Standard Oil Company to control an organ of public opinion.

"Judge Doyle held no public office and numbered the Standard Oil Company as one among a number of clients. I told the president Judge Doyle was a man of high character and a lawyer of great ability and experience and would make a good judge, but explained what his corporate professional connection had been, and the president, as between Doyle and Taylor, also an able man, preferred Taylor and appointed him, not, as I recollect it, for any reason discreditable to Doyle, but because Doyle's many corporate professional associations would make him less acceptable to the public and interfere with his usefulness as a judge."

Senator Foraker's second charge, that Mr. Taft accepted favors from a partner of Judge Doyle and a "magnate in the glass trust" while at Middle Bass island, Mr. Taft characterizes as ridiculous. He says he was the guest of the Middle Bass club, as Presidents Harrison, McKinley and Cleveland had been.

Hearst Hits Foraker.

Columbus, O.—Senator J. B. Foraker of Ohio was openly charged here by W. R. Hearst with being an agent of the Standard Oil Company. Mr. Hearst said that after the oil octopus had been driven from the Republican party by President Roosevelt the Democratic party had welcomed the Standard with open arms and adopted it.

Mr. Hearst read a series of letters from John D. Archbold, the Standard Oil man, to Senator Foraker. In these communications Archbold gave instructions to the senator in regard to what should be done in pending legislative matters, partrcularly as to bills affecting corporations, and in two of the letters referred to inclosures of certificates of deposit, one for $15,000 and another for $14,500.

Further Charges by Hearst.

St. Louis.—William Randolph Hearst went after Senator J. B. Foraker here stronger than in his Columbus speech.

Mr. Hearst first read a letter in which it was said that a certificate of deposit for $50,000 was inclosed. The letter purported to have been sent to Mr. Foraker and to have been signed by John D. Archbold.

Following this, Mr. Hearst read another letter said to have been signed by Mr. Archbold, in which the Standard Oil man suggested to Mr. Foraker action regarding a bill introduced in the United States senate by the late Senator Jones of Arkansas.

Gen. DuPont Resigns.

New York.—Following many rumors on the subject which were afloat here and in Washington, Chairman Hitchcock of the Republican national committee Friday night announced that Gen. T. Coleman DuPont of Delaware, head of the bureau of campaign speakers of the national committee, had resigned as head of that bureau and also as a member of the executive committee of the national committee and that his resignation had been accepted.

Dog Brought His Friend.

An English lady, who had been from home some time, was recently greeted on her return by the old sheep dog with great delight. So pleased was the animal that he at once went off to a farm seven miles away to summon another dog—an old chum—to come and see his old mistress. This dog was blind, and, after the introduction, was taken back safely by its canine friend.

MINNEAPOLIS GREETS TAFT

A TREMENDUOUS CROWD MEETS REPUBLICAN CANDIDATE FOR PRESIDENCY.

The Auditorium Filled With An Enthusiastic Concourse of People. Large Overflow Meetings Held Outside.

Handling without gloves his record as a federal judge, in connection with labor decisions handed down by him, Mr. Taft explained them and then stoutly stated that the decisions had been rendered in accordance with the law and that was what the law ought to be.

The big auditorium was filled to its capacity with an audience which was quickly responsive and voiced its approval in hearty and spontaneous cheers and in enthusiastic reception to the candidate. It shouted when he first apeared on the platform to take his seat beside the senior senator, Knute Nelson, and again roared its enthusiasm when he arose to open his address.

J. W. Nash, chairman of the Hennepin county central committee, presided over the meeting and introduced Senator Knute Nelson who introduced the Republican candidate.

On either side of the speaker were rows of distinguished Republicans from St. Paul and from Minneapolis and the surrounding state, who had some here to attend the Taft meeting.

Among them were Senator Moses Clapp; J. F. Jacobson, candidate for governor, who was later to modestly disappear from the stage when the crowd called upon him vigorously for a speech; Congressmen James A. Tawney, Charles R. Davis, James T. McCleary, Halvor Steenerson, Frank Nye of Minneapolis, F. C. Stevens of St. Paul, C. B. Miller of Duluth and A. J. Volstead and C. A. Lindberg of the Seventh and Sixth districts respectively, all of the state officers were on the stage, State Senators Edward E. Smith, Ripley Brower of St. Cloud and many others.

Introducing Mr. Taft, Senator Nelson said:

"Mr. Taft needs no introduction to this audience, yet in formally introducing him, I must ask pardon for a brief prelude to his remarks. Eleven years ago last March, after a Democratic interregnum of four years, bringing disaster to the country, the Republican party came into power with that clear-headed statesman, William McKinley in the executive chair. His untimely death thrust his mantle upon another great statesman, Theodore Roosevelt, that energetic and vigilant statesman. Under the leadership and guidance of these two men, the Republican party has given much immediate and constructive legislation, solving many of the problems of the day."

Mr. Taft responded immediately and received a hearty ovation. He launched at once into his address. Mr. Taft said:

"I've had rather a tough time of it lately, ladies and gentlemen. My voice is bad and I am very hoarse. I have been speaking in many places in several states and what is lacking in my voice, you will find scattered over those different states.

"I understand that 1,000 laboring men have honored me with their presence tonight and I think it is only fair that I should take up the questions supposed to be of particular importance to labor.

"For the most part, laboring men are clear-headed and intelligent and I am sure they are willing to listen to argument. Now no one man can deliver that labor vote to any one party and no one man has the labor vote in his vest pocket to deliver. I am certain of that.

"Among other remarkable records made by the Republican party in the last 12 years is a record on labor matters and affairs. No administration, and I am willing to submit this statement to any labor leader in the country, has done so much for the cause of labor as Theodore Roosevelt in the seven years he has been in the executive chair.

"The laboring men are not beggars, they are not paupers, but they are seeking laws which shall abolish the tendency of the common law to recognize their right in the question of employers' liability. The laboring man is dependent upon his wages. He needs to support his wife and family.

"He must have them. When he works for an employer who does not comply with the law of safety in environment, the laborer cannot quit his position, although he knows that the law is not being complied with. He must have the wages to support his family. But because he knew that defects were there he should not be prevented from securing damages, should he be injured because of these defects.

"The laboring man has the right to ask from congress and the legislatures of his states, such statutes as will tend toward the establishing of dealing on the level as between the powerful and the weak.

"In the first place, I wish to affirm, without fear of contradiction, that the Republican party has done vastly more than the Democratic party, both on state and national legislation, for the protection and in the interest of labor.

"The objection has been made that this is paternalism and socialism and is introducing the government into the banking business. The objection is without weight. The laisser faire school of political economists and the supporters of individualism in society have had their theories very much modified by the practical demands of society, and the principle embodied in the modification may be stated as follows: (That where a general service to the public cannot be well discharged by a private enterprise, and can be very effectively and economically discharged by the government, the government should undertake it.) The postal savings bank comes exactly within this principle. If there were savings banks in all the country as numerous and as easy of access as they are in Massachusetts, in the New England states and in New York, it might be said that the postal savings bank was an invasion of territory properly occupied by private enterprises, although even then it could be pointed out, as the experience in other countries shows, that the function performed by the postal savings banks is much more comprehensive than that of the ordinary savings banks. But when it is considered that in only 11 of 35 states are there saving bank facilities, when it is known that in the middle West, east of the Rocky Mountains, the average distance from any postoffice to a bank of any kind is 33 miles, and west of the Rockies is 55 miles, it can be readily understood that private enterprise does not supply the need of savings banks which in order to furnish a motive and opportunity for thrift and savings should be easy of access to the class whose welfare it is sought thereby to improve. Of the $3,500,000,000 deposits in savings banks, 33 per cent is in New England, 38 per cent in New York, 21 per cent in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Iowa and California, leaving but 8 per cent of the total in other states.

"This postal savings bank system, however, does not meet the unqualified approval of the Democratic party. (It has not the vote-catching quality and involves only the old-fashioned gradual movement toward better things by means of industry and thrift and saving.) The party under its present leadership must have something which offers a short cut to reform at the cost of the honest and the industrious.

"Let us now analyze the remedy proposed by Mr. Bryan and the Democratic party. It certainly proposes to make the conservative banker pay for the negligence, carelessness, lack of confidence or dishonesty of the failing banker. It takes from one man without fault on his part money to pay for the default of another.

"That I submit is socialistic in the extreme, and so violates all equitable principles that the remedy should be condemned for this reason. If the fault or misfortune of one banker is to be paid for by his colleague who is without fault, there is not the slightest reason why all insurance companies, life and fire, should not be compelled to guarantee the losses of all companies, and it is difficult in principle to distinguish between such a proposition and a proposition that all the farmers of the country should guarantee each other's crops, so as to save each farmer from the drought or blight that may come to his particular district in the vicissitudes of farming.

Expenses Not Imposition.

Mr. Bryan suggests the expenses connected with the examination of banks is an imposition of a burden on one man for the default of another. There is no analogy whatever between the reasonable requirements for the examination of all banks and the taking out of one man's pocket money to pay for the ascertained fault of another. If there were but one banker and he a man of known probity and of the highest character, public policy would require an examination of his bank as thorough as that of any other bank. Trustees and public officers, no matter how pure their character or well known their honesty, when they are subjected to the auditor's examination, have the burden on them to establish their honesty and correct business methods."

To those who could not hear Mr Taft speak at the Auditorium, the big event of the rally was the parade from the Union station when Mr. Taft and his party arrived in Minneapolis from St. Paul.

It was a picturesque affair with no details lacking. The red fire, the flaming torches, the waving banners and flags and the campaign music of old-fashioned presidential fights formed the principal part.

It is probable that there were 2,000 men in line and fully 10,000 more or less hidden under a sea of umbrellas, watched the parade escort Mr. Taft up brilliantly lighted Nicollet avenue.

The parade formed at the West Hotel at 7:25 and marched direct to the Union station. There was but a slight delay at the station. Including the marchers, about 7,000 persons were on hand to see the presidential candidate. When Mr. Taft was driven thru the solid ranks of humanity in an enclosed automobile, a great shout went up and the cheering continued at intervals during the triumphal march to the Auditorium.

After concluding his address in the Auditorium, Mr. Taft made two brief addresses to the overflow meetings. The cold, damp night air affected his voice greatly and he could scarcely be heard. He said that the country needs confidence in order to give the best employment to labor and the safest investment to capital. He said that Mr. Bryan had evolved many theories but that they had always been proven wrong.

MASKED BANDITS TERRORIZE TOWN

ROB POSTOFFICE, HOLD UP LABORERS ON WORK TRAIN AND RIFLE HOUSES.

One of the Thieves is Captured in Des Moines and Makes a Confession. Secured $300 from the Postoffice.

Des Moines, Iowa, Oct. 1.—Two masked men, one a novice, who was easily captured and the other an old hand, literally took possession of the town of Slater, 25 miles north of Des Moines early yesterday morning, cracked the postoffice safe, blowing it up with dynamite, and securing $300 in cash and $25 in stamps, held up 11 Italian laborers who were found asleep on a Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul work train and relieved them of a total of $110, ransacked the apartments of the Misses Ella and Marie Reinertson, but left empty handed, entered the homes of C. Backman and secured about $50 worth of silver and broke into a blacksmith shop where they found the tools used in forcing the postoffice door.

The raids were made between 2 and 4 o'clock yesterday morning and at 6 o'clock the Des Moines police who had been notified of the robberies, picked up a young chap who gave his name as George Neal. He carried a kit of burglar's tools, a 44 gun and about $35 in small change, besides a few postoffice money orders.

He made a full confession saying that his home was in Milwaukee and came to Iowa in search of employment and met a stranger who pointed out to him how easy it would be to hold up the town of Slater.

RIOT.

Drunken Mob Attacks Church Worshipers Killing Three.

Jellico, Tenn., Sept. 29.—One of the bloodiest affairs in the history of eastern Tennessee occurred north of Anthras postoffice Sunday. The scene was a little Baptist church, within fifty yards of which is a "blind tiger," which has been operated for months.

The services had closed and nearly all the congregation had emerged from the church when a crowd of drunken men, who had visited the "blind tiger," began firing into the worshipers with pistols.

John Bennett, J. W. McKinney and Edward Thomas were shot down at the church door and died almost instantly. The preacher, Rev. Mr. Kind, was shot and mortally wounded. Another worshiper, named Gibson, was also shot, but is not seriously wounded.

Anthras is five miles from a railroad and has no telephone connection. Jellico officers could not learn the names of any of the men implicated in the shooting. All of the dead and wounded were men of families except Bennett.

CHANCE FOR DEMOCRATS.

There is a Bare Possibility of Controlling Iowa Legislature.

Des Moines, Sept. 29.—When it is considered that eighteen Republican members came to the last legislature on a majority of less than 150 votes, the significance of the present Republican factional fight over senatorial nomination in connection with the regular November election may be appreciated.

The possibility of a Democratic legislature is more fully realized when it is known that the changing of a single precinct in nearly forty legislative districts would elect Democratic members to the legislature.

With such a gain, and holding what they already have, the Democrats could overwhelmingly control the Thirty-third general assembly this winter.

Four Hurt in Explosion.

Philadelphia, Sept. 29.—Four police officers were injured, three of them seriously, by the explosion of a dynamite detonating cap left by burglars in their hurried departure from the diamond store of Jos. H. Deschamps at Seventh and Chestnut streets.

Cracksmen Routed.

Cogswell, N. D., Sept. 30.—Three explosions was the cue that brought a small army of armed citizen from their homes at 1:15 this morning to interrupt the job of four bank robbers at the Sargent County State bank.

Barn Burns.

Fergus Falls, Minn., Sept. 30.—Eighteen hundred bushels of oats and a large quantity of hay were destroyed in a fire which broke out in the barn of Mr. Hinth at Western.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Gross Earnings.

St. Paul.—The supreme court is to be asked to decide whether the state or the railroads are correct in their interpretation of the meaning of "gross earnings" in the law prescribing a tax on the gross earnings of the companies.

The railway companies generally protest that they should not be asked to pay taxes on other than direct income to the corporations. The public examiner says that taxes should be paid on income from the rental of cars and equipment, from work trains used for other roads, and other items.

The state claimed taxes on these items in a recent case against the Minnesota & International road, the total back taxes being $6,256. The district court awarded only $1,400. At the same time the court gave the state a verdict for $1,450 out of $5,355 claimed from the Northwestern Telephone company. The state will appeal these two cases to the supreme court to obtain a ruling on the meaning of gross earnings.

The total amount involved among all the roads and corporations amounts to about $100,000, as there are a number of roads which have resisted payment of back taxes on disputed items.

Unusual Ignorance.

Mendota.—Living on a farm five miles beyond Mendota, in almost unbelievable ignorance of the advance of affairs in the world, it required the death of the father of the family, Peter Burke, to bring the family into contact with experiences which are almost as common as the shining of the sun or the moon. Previous to the father's death Friday no member of the family had ever been to Rosemount, a town a few miles beyond the farm; the 32-year-old son had never ridden on a railroad train, and it was during the second trip he had ever made to St. Paul, caused by his father's death, that he rode on a street car.

When the father died at a rather old age last week the family did not appear to realize what they should do with the body. A physician had not been called until the old man was practically beyond hope, the members of the family not recognizing the seriousness of his illness. Following the death no move was made to secure an undertaker until thirty-six hours later. At that time an outsider suggested that the body be taken in charge by an undertaker. Accordingly a St. Paul man was called.

Huge Deposits.

Minneapolis.—Bank deposits in Minneapolis are at the highest mark in the history of the city. They have increased $15,025,126 since the last call made by the controller of the currency for a statement of the condition of the national banks at the close of business on July 15.

The loans and discounts show an increase of $4,614,999.01 at the close of business Sept. 23, the date of a call issued late yesterday from Washington. The total resources foot up an aggregate increase of $15,576,482.12.

In making these large gains, the banks have passed their individual records for deposits, and the largest of the institutions in total resources reaches a mark unequaled in any city west of Chicago, with the exception of St. Louis. The Northwestern National is in the $30,000,000 class, a mark which it passed both the day before and the day following the call.

Coincident with the call, the clearings statement for the week ending the following day, Sept. 24, amounted to $31,434,000, a gain of 29.1 per cent over the corresponding week of last year.

Gold.

Embarrass.—There is considerable excitement among the farmers of this territory over the announcement that gold and silver has been discovered on the land of C. H. McDermott, passenger conductor on the Iron Range railroad.

Mr. McDermott had a drill driven down forty feet and sent samples to an assayer in Denver, who, after a thorough test, reported back that while there was both gold and silver in the samples submitted it was not in sufficient quantities to pay for mining it. McDermott and his neighbors believe that if the drill is sent down a few hundred feet it will strike a vein of pay ore.

NEWS NOTES.

Celebration of 225th anniversary of the landing of Germans in America was held.

St. Paul.—Justice Elliott files strong dissenting opinion in supreme court in decision upholding right of widow to inherit property of husband she murdered.

Minneapolis.—At the request and on the recommendation of Frank B. Kellogg, national committeeman from Minnesota, William Henry Eustis has been appointed local treasurer of the national republican committee for Minnesota.

Brainerd.—Charles Edward Gates, who is walking from Boston to San Francisco in 150 days under the auspices of the Boston Post, arrived in Brainerd at 12:40 this afternoon, coming from Aitkin today.

Minneapolis.—Minneapolis schools start out this year with an attendance of 40,570 pupils, 691 more than were enrolled the first month in the year 1907.

Faribault.—Joseph St. George and his son, Fred, were seriously injured while at work blasting in a stone quarry Saturday afternoon.

Sale of Ditching Jobs.

Notice is hereby given, That on the 12th day of October 1908, at one o'clock P. M., at the office of the county Auditor in the city of Red Lake Falls, Minnesota, I will sell the jobs of digging and constructing the Ditch No. 31 of Red Lake County, established by the Board of County Commissioners of Red Lake County State of Minesota, by their order bearing date September 18th 1908, viz: For the work as one job, and also for one or more sections of 100 feet each, and also for one or more of the construction jobs, each of said sections to be known and numbered by stakes as shown by the report of the engineer in said matter, commencing at the one including the outlet, and from thence, successively up stream to the one including the source said sections being numbered from station "0" to station 268 inclusive, to the lowest responsible bidder or bidders, and that bids are invited for said work; said work to be completed within the time required, and in the manner specified, in said engineer's report And no bid will be entertained which exceeds more than thirty (30) per cent. over and above the estimate cost of the construction, in any case, as stated in the said order; and the successful bidder will be required to give a satisfactory bond, to be approved by the Auditor of said county, with two freehold sureties, for the faithful performance and fulfilment of his contract, and to pay all damages that may accrue by reason of his failure to complete the job within the time required in the contract. The said order and estimates and profile are on file and may be seen at my office.

The approximate amount of work to be done in the construction of said ditch is as follows:

The excavation and removal of 51,921 cubic yards of earth. Under the head of excavation shall be included all excavation required for the formation of the ditch, the altering of the highways or private roads, and excavation connected in any way with the proper construction of said ditch, and the hauling and depositing of the material excavated so as to form a turnpike or grade along the west side of said ditch from section 20 to section 79-15 inclusive, and from station 79-15 to station 131-95. The grade or turnpike shall be upon the north side of the ditch, and from station 131-95 to station 268 the material excavated shall be placed along the west side of the ditch. The engineer reserves the right to change the place of the excavation along the ditch as the occasion or conditions may require at any time during the progress of the work.

The estimated cost of the work is $5,363.12.

All bids must be accompanied by a certified check payable to the Auditor of said county, for not less than ten per cent. of the amount of each bid.

The right to reject any and all bids is hereby reserved.

Dated September 22nd, 1908.

Woman's Curiosity.

"Woman's curiosity," said Mr. Fletcher, "is a quality of mind beyond human understanding."

"Yes," said Mrs. Fletcher. "What made you think of that?"

"The fool actions of a woman that I saw downtown today. She followed a man ten blocks just to get to read a placard that was fastened to his back. She spotted him at Thirty-fourth street. That was really the end of her trip—I made that out from something she said to another woman who was too fat to join in the chase—but when she caught sight of that flaming red poster tied to the man's back her curiosity got the better of her and she set out after him. He led her quite a chase across town and downtown and back again, but she never weakened. She tagged faithfully along in his wake, and finally she got close enough to read that notice."

Mrs. Fletcher reflected a moment.

"What did it say?" she asked.

"It advised her to get her teeth pulled somewhere on Sixth avenue."

Mrs. Fletcher thought again.

"Where were you all the time she was trying to find that out?"

"Me?" said Fletcher. "Oh, I was following the woman. I wanted to see if she finally caught up with the man."—New York Times.

The Porcelain Secret.

The porcelain industry of Germany is comparatively young, says the Berlin Morgen Post, and its development was rapid. Although it is generally believed that the Chinese kept their processes of manufacture secret, Julian's translations of their voluminous encyclopedia show that this is not true. All who could have read the work might have known also the porcelain secret. But evidently no German fathomed the mechanical mystery until the apothecary's apprentice Boettgar, 200 years ago, made the first German porcelain at Dresden. Some years before he had attracted attention by proclaiming the discovery of a method of changing base metal into gold. King Frederick I. gave him orders for the precious metal, which the sixteen-year-old inventor could not execute, and in fear he fled to Dresden and became a subject of King August the Strong. While endeavoring to make gold he discovered the porcelain secret and inscribed his door thus: "Into a potter was changed by Almighty God a man who thought he could make gold."

In the course of a few years the body attains its full growth, but the heart may grow forever. It is a pity that so few hearts enjoy the privilege.—Albany (Tex.) News.

Marlin

For shooting the swift flying, heavily feathered ducks and geese the Marlin 12-gauge repeating shotgun has no superior. This gun is exceedingly strong in construction and yet is not heavy. It is bored to throw an excellent pattern with great penetration. The solid top keeps out the weather and the brush and twigs of the blind, and the side ejector prevents the empty shells from being a nuisance to the shooter. It's the best bad weather gun.

The Marlin 12-gauge is suited to all forms of bird and trap shooting, and for durability, strength and ease of action is unexcelled. Made for both black and smokeless powders and for heavy loads. Two separate extractors make sure work.

His Own People.

The negro blood wherever it is, declares Ray Stannard Baker in American Magazine, supplies an element of light heartedness which will not be wholly crushed. In illustration he tells this story of a very light mulatto of Tennessee:

A number of years ago it came to him suddenly one day that he was white enough to pass anywhere for white, and he acted instantly on the inspiration. He went to Memphis and bought a first class ticket on a Mississippi river boat to Cincinnati. No one suspected that he was colored. He sat at the table with white people and even occupied a stateroom with a white man. At first, he said, he could hardly restrain his exultation, but after a time, although he associated with the white men, he began to be lonesome.

"It grew colder and colder," he said. In the evening he sat on the upper deck, and as he looked over the railing he could see down below the negro passengers and deck hands talking and laughing. After a time when it grew darker they began to sing the inimitable negro songs.

"That finished me," he said. "I got up and went downstairs and took my place among them. I've been a negro ever since."

His Insignia.

The mayor of Z. is a self made man, and, as in the case of some others of that kind, not too much attention was paid to his early education. A little while ago a gentleman who was engaged in compiling a work on corporation regalia wrote to his worship requesting a photograph of his insignia. The mayor by return of post replied that he was only too pleased to accede to the other's wish. "But," he wrote, "instead of a mere photograph I beg to send you the genuine article." And there followed immediately underneath in good round copperplate the mayoral signature.—London Answers.

Circumstances Alter Cases.

Lady (entering breathless)—I want to stop the divorce suit! Lawyer—Why, you said your husband was an abominable, beastly brute and you wanted to be rid of him at any cost! Lady—Oh, yes; I know. But now an automobile has run over him, and I want you to start suit for damages.—Lippincott's Magazine.

He Smoked.

"What do you mean by smoking my pipe, young man?" queried the stern father of a precocious five-year-old.

"Mamma said if I teased the cat again she'd make me smoke for it," explained the little fellow, "and I teased her again."—Chicago News.

After all, it is the imponderables that move the world—heat, electricity, love.—Holmes.

THE SCOURING RUSH.

A Queer Plant That Can Be Changed Into a Mineral.

The scouring rush, Equisetum hiemale, is an interesting plant which has been put to practical use. In old times its hollow, flinty stems were in great repute for kitchen cleaning purposes. The stems are hollow and are easily separated at the joints. If one would satisfy himself as to the peculiar property that first suggested the use of this rush for scouring purposes he has only to draw a joint across the edge of his teeth to find it like a file.

A very pretty chemical experiment is frequently made with the rush. If one takes a small vial of nitric acid into which any ordinary lead is immersed he will quickly see it dissolve, literally eaten up by the acid. But what does the scouring rush do under such circumstances?

Immediately upon its introduction to the acid the sizzling process begins. The green pulp of the stem is gradually consumed, the tube, however, still retaining its shape, becoming paler and paler in color until after a few hours the specimen is transformed into a pure white alabaster-like column which defies any further attack from the acid.

On taking it from the vial and washing it carefully in running water the operator holds in his hands a beautiful tube of pure, glassy flint, or silex, an object of great microscopic beauty of construction. The scouring rush is no longer a vegetable, but a mineral, and in observing its skeleton of stone the secret of its utility as a scouring brush is easily understood.—New York Tribune.

DUTCH STREET CARS.

The Conductor Carries More Documents Than a Congressman.

Countries may be known by their street cars. The rush and jar of our big cities are exemplified in the rapid, rude transit of its inhabitants So the character of orderly little Holland may be gathered from observation of her car service. Says J. U. Higinbotham in "Three Weeks in Holland and Belgium:"

Street car fare in Holland is 3 cents a trip, and for 4 cents you receive a return ticket. The conductor carries more documents than a congressman. For every fare he opens an aluminium box about 4 by 6 and hands out a receipt or a return ticket, as the case may be.

When the passengers pay their tickets he places the tickets in a leather pouch hung by a strap round his neck It is important that you retain the receipt given you, for at uncertain intervals a "controlleur" gets on the car and examines all receipts, puts his O. K. on them with a rubber stamp and compares the result with the manifest or log carried by the conductor It is quite the correct thing to tip the conductor with a Dutch cent or two.

Each car has a card inside stating how many places there are, and on each platform is another saying how many people may stand thereon When the seats and both platforms are full the sign "Vol" is put up and no more are permitted to get aboard Our car probably had thirty people in it and on the platforms and was turning business away at every crossing.

A Real Apology.

"When the late Joel Chandler Harris was an editor here among us," said an Atlantan, "I called on him one day and found him very willing to correct an error about me that crept into his columns.

"We talked about newspaper contradictions, public apologies and the like, and 'Uncle Remus' took down a scrapbook and read me an apology that was an apology indeed. It had happened, he said, in a Transvaal paper. I'll never forget it. I agreed with Mr. Harris that it was the finest specimen of the public apology and retraction extant. It said:

> "I, the undersigned, A. C. du Plessis, retract hereby everything I have said against the innocent Mr. G. P. Bezuidenhout, calling myself an infamous liar and striking my mouth with the exclamation: 'You mendacious mouth! Why do you lie so?' I declare, further, that I know nothing against the character of Mr. G. P. Bezuidenhout. I call myself, besides, a genuine liar of the first class.
> "A. C. DU PLESSIS."

His Cough Cure.

"In my boyhood there came to our town," said a clergyman, "a gentle minister who, the very first Sunday of his incumbency, stopped effectually his coughing congregation.

"It was a congregation, too, singularly addicted to coughing. Rattling volleys of coughs ran over it every few minutes. The minister, indeed, that first Sunday could hardly make himself heard. He had rather a weak voice.

"Well, after his sermon had proceeded for ten or twelve minutes, now audible enough, now drowned under great waves of coughs, he took a resolution, and when the next outbreak was at its height he ceased preaching.

"At once the coughing ceased. There was a profound silence. The minister smiled.

"'My friends,' said he, 'it seems that when I stop you stop.'

"From that day in that church they coughed no more."

"Parceling Out de People."

Fishing, two boys strung their big catch on the same string. Passing a graveyard they entered the gate to divide the catch, dropping two fish just as they went inside the cemetery.

Passing, an aged negro heard the two boys: "I'll take this one, you that one; I this one, you that one; I this one, you that one," etc.

The negro listened in dismay and ran away as rapidly as his old legs could carry him. He met his negro minister, who called:

"Deacon, why you run in such terror?"

"Declare, parson, I been down yonder by de graveyard and over de fence heard de devil and de Lord parceling out de people atween 'em."

The boys were still dividing—"You take that, I take this," etc. Finally one boy asked, "What you going to do with them two at the gate?"

This was more than parson or deacon could stand, and both ran pellmell, neither wishing to take any further chances, no matter what was going on just over the fence.—Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle.

Penguin Battles.

The penguin, a notable diver among sea birds, wins his mate by right of conquest. The male birds fight for the possession of the females. These curious birds have regular duel grounds, where relics of innumerable combats in the shape of feathers lie scattered about. In the center is the fighting arena, clear of all debris. The penguins' feathers and blubber form an efficient shield against their opponents' beaks, so the weapon used is the short flipper, the only wings the birds possess. The fight begins with the two combatants walking round each other waiting for an opportunity to grip. Once this is done the flippers come into play. The fighters shower blow after blow upon each other. There is no record as to how these fights end, but it is a safe supposition to say that they are seldom fatal. The force of the blow from a penguin's flipper is such that three or four of them will draw blood from the human hand.

How Models Make Pictures.

The artist gazed in rapture on "The Kiss," his latest picture.

"Do you grasp," he said, "the passionate grace of the girl's attitude, the warmth and the power wherewith her tense white arms draw the young man closer, ever closer? Well, I got that idea from my model, a shopgirl.

"But for my model's suggestion I'd have put the girl in a stiff, cold pose, and the picture would never have been the masterpiece it is. But my model pointed out to me the abandon wherewith a girl, whether of high or low station, gives herself up to a kiss' charm. She illustrated the thing, aided by a male model, a young medical student. Yes, she made my picture.

"The fact is, models make, with their valuable hints and suggestions, lots of pictures. There's many a masterpiece whose merit is due to the splendid pose that the model originated for the principal figure."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

GENERAL NEWS.

The second and culminating step in the Austro-Bulgarian program was consummated when Emperor Francis Joseph formally proclaimed the practical annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina to the dual monarchy. Turkey called upon the powers to preserve to her what they guaranteed by the treaty of Berlin. Austria and Bulgaria strongly declare their determination to keep what they have taken. Servia is protesting belligerently against being hemmed in more strongly between two unpopular neighbors and against having the Servians in Bosnia absorbed into the Austro-Hungarian nationality. The other powers concerned in the Berlin treaty are discussing the holding of an international conference. Turkey's unexpected policy of restraint minimizes the possibilities of war, which now is considered out of the question.

Capt. J. Clayton Erb, confidential secretary to Israel W. Durham and one of the political leaders of Philadelphia, was shot and instantly killed at his country home, and Mrs. Catherine Baisdell, his wife's sister, is said to have admitted shooting him during a family quarrel.

As a part of the Founders' week celebration in Philadelphia a monument was unveiled to Francis Daniel Pastorius, the first German immigrant to come to America.

Messages of congratulation from President Roosevelt and Messrs. Bryan and Taft were read in the trans-Mississippi congress in San Francisco.

BULGARIANS CAST OFF THE YOKE OF TURKEY

Independence Proclaimed with Ferdinand as Their Czar--Austria Annexes Bosnia and Herzegovina--Two Events May Provoke Sultan to War.

London.—In the ancient capital of Tirnovo the independence of Bulgaria was proclaimed Monday, with the czar of the Bulgarians as a ruler. Czar of the Bulgarians is recognized to mean more than czar of Bulgaria, because it is a distinct intimation that he regards his country as having sovereignty over all the people of that blood in the east.

Within a day or two Austria-Hungary, which has been working with Prince Ferdinand in this preconcerted plan, will proclaim the new status of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The question, which has been stirring the whole of Europe more deeply than any similar question in the memory of the present generation is, does it mean war? From all the capitals come reports indicating that it means, first of all, another European congress of the signers of the treaty of Berlin to consider the situation and probably to revise the treaty.

Turkey May Avoid War.

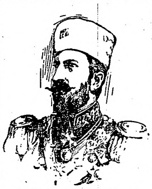
Turkey, caught in a moment of weakness, is the victim of this situation, and while some internal animosities have been stirred up, probably no power is willing to make war. Reports from the emancipated Turkish press to London indicate that the "Young Turks" will swallow this bitter pill as best they can and, if they do, naturally the Bulgarians, while willing and eager for war, will have no cause on which to base the beginning of hostilities.



Prince Ferdinand of Bulgaria.

From the British standpoint the whole affair has been a surprise, and more than a surprise, because for the first time in years the British government felt itself with apparently a perfect understanding with France and Russia and complete friendship with Italy, to be in a position where it dominated European politics, reserving out of this consideration the almost open enmity between itself and Germany.

France Also for Peace.

The chances of war between Bulgaria and Turkey are being minimized by Great Britain and France, who are working together and who have advised Turkey against it. Turkey apparently is disposed to follow this advice, and it is believed that if hasty action on the part of Turkey can be prevented, Bulgaria will have difficulty in finding an excuse to begin war.

The action of Prince Ferdinand in proclaiming the independence of Bulgaria is condemned alike by the governments and press of Europe, but in some quarters this is considered a matter of minor importance, so long as it does not eventuate in war, as compared with the threatened annexation of the provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina by Austria-Hungary. Reports from Belgrade indicate that Servia has been aroused to the danger point, bands of Servians marching the streets of Belgrade and shouting for war with Austria.

Turkey Refuses to Yield.

Constantinople.—The council of ministers met early Monday evening and were still sitting at midnight, preparing a protest which will be submitted to Bulgaria and the powers against the violation of the treaty of Berlin.

Prince Ferdinand has telegraphed to the Turkish government that he was compelled to respect the voice of the nation, and hoped that the friendly relations between the two countries would continue. Turkey's reply, which is being prepared, refuses to recognize Bulgaria's independence.

A committee of the "Young Turks" party also is holding a session at which the situation is being reviewed.

Turkey to Appeal to Powers.

Constantinople.—The council of ministers held a long session Tuesday morning to consider the action of Bulgaria in declaring her independence of Turkey at Tirnova Monday. It was decided that it was impossible to accept any proceedings that violated existing treaties, and that Turkey should address a circular note to the powers pointing out the necessity of taking measures to enforce respect for the treaty of Berlin.

Replying to the telegram sent to the Turkish government by Prince Ferdinand, in which he said that in declaring the independence of Bulgaria he had been compelled to respect the voice of the nation and expressed the hope that the friendly relations between the two countries would continue, Turkey says she has invited the powers to confer on the situation, and as her rights are guaranteed by the powers, she will look to them for their defense.

Servians Are Enraged.

Belgrade, Servia.—The news of Austria-Hungary's action with regard to the annexation of the provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina has aroused Servia to the danger point. The streets are thronged with a wild mob, many of the rioters discharging their revolvers and demanding war with Austria rather than annexation.

Mediation by France.

Paris.—France has essayed the role of mediator with the object of preventing war between Turkey and Bulgaria, and as a result of Foreign Minister Pichon's series of conferences Monday with the representatives of the powers, including M. Iswolsky, the Russian foreign minister; Naoum Pasha, the Turkish ambassador to France; the Austro-Hungarian, the British, the American and the Italian ambassadors, and of active exchanges which have been going on between the various cabinets. It was announced that France, Great Britain, Russia and possibly Italy were prepared to act in unison to preserve peace and to call a conference of the signatories of the Berlin treaty to deal diplomatically with the situation that has arisen between Turkey and Bulgaria and to harmonize conflicting interests so that fresh complications may be avoided.

Bulgaria Declares Independence.

This action was taken at Tirnovo by Prince Ferdinand, who was elected prince of Bulgaria in 1887. The Bulgarian cabinet was present with the prince, having met Sunday at the frontier and journeyed with him to Tirnovo.

The proclamation was made at the cathedral of Tinovo at 11 o'clock Monday. It was a dramatic scene, accompanied by much enthusiasm. A manifesto of independence addressed to the nation was subsequently issued by the prince.

Tirnovo is the ancient capital of the kingdom of Bulgaria, and it was there in the olden days that the kings of Bulgaria were crowned.

Charged with Slaying Kin.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—As a result of evidence taken before the coroner's jury Monday, J. C. Stanfield is in jail charged with having murdered his father-in-law, H. C. Risley.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Lower Taxation.

St. Paul.—Owing to the increase in the amount of taxable property found in the state the state auditor, in making the levy for the taxes to be paid next year, recommends a tax of 3.33 mills, as against 3.48 mills for this year. The total amount of assessed property in 1907 was $1,048,000,000, as against a net valuation of $1,063,630,000 for this year.

Slight decreases are made in the levy for state revenue and for the university campus fund. The other levies are the same as before. To the levy made by the auditor must be added the levy of 1.23 mills for state school purposes.

In speaking of the levy State Auditor Iverson said:

"The legislature of 1907 made a tax levy of $1,700,000 for state revenue purposes for each of the years 1907 and 1908, and fixed the maximum rate of 1.7 mills for each year.

"In 1907 the maximum rate was levied. For this year, owing to the increased assessment, it is possible to reduce the rate, and we have accordingly made the rate for state revenue purposes 1.6 mills, which will produce the amount levied by the legislature. The legislature of 1907 also made a levy of $175,000 for each of four years for university campus purposes.

"In 1907 .2 of a mill was levied for that purpose. This produced more than the amount of the levy. This year the levy for university campus purposes is .15 of a mill, which will produce somewhat less than the $175,000; but taking the two years together it will produce about the required sum for the two years.

"The total levy for all state purposes in 1907 was 3.48 mills. That included .1 for soldiers' relief, .2 funding tax, 1.7 state revenue, .05 state road and bridge, .2 for university campus, 1 for the state school tax and .23 for the university."

The State's Finances.

St. Paul.—State Treasurer C. C. Dinehart has just completed a statement comparing the condition of the state's finances on Oct. 1, 1908, with Oct. 1, 1907. The reports show the total receipts of his office for the year up to Oct. 1, 1908, were $2,141,804.75, as compared with $1,683,885.40 for the previous year, a gain in favor of the present year of approximately half a million dollars.

The revenue fund on Oct. 1, 1908, contained $368,092.94 and on Oct. 1, 1907, $217,879.56.

There was $88,031.75 in the university campus fund on Oct. 1, 1907, and $264,338.05 in that fund on Oct. 1, 1908.

According to a report just completed by State Insurance Commissioner Hartigan, the receipts for his office for the nine months ending Sept. 30, 1908, showed a gain of $3,784.84 over the corresponding period for 1907. The total receipts for the current period were $56,906.38 as against $52,121.54 for 1907.

Scalded to Death.

Faribault.—Scalded alive in a large tank of boiling water was the fate of Henry Kuehl, twenty-one years of age.

Kuehl was employed at the packing plant in the North end and was assisting in killing hogs. He tried to pull one of the killed animals into the vat by its ears, when he lost his hold, slipped and fell bodily into the tank of boiling water.

It was several minutes before he could be rescued from his perilous position. Large pieces of skin and flesh fell from the body after he was taken from the tank.

Kuehl was hurried to the hospital, but there was not the slightest chance for his recovery.

Breaks the Record.

Minneapolis.—The record total of 27,667,990 bushels grain made up the September business of the Chamber of Commerce. The state inspection department passed upon 23,765 cars. Reports appeared late, delayed a day by the greater labor involved in preparing them.

Of wheat alone 17,115,440 bushels arrived in Minneapolis, most of which was immediately taken by local or country flour mills, although there was some accumulation of wheat in elevator storage late in the month.

Compared with the 27,667,990 bushels in the total, September of last year was light, receipts in that month having reached but 13,594,910. The excess for this year is 14,073,080.

NEWS NOTES.

Belle Plaine, Minn.—Fire destroyed J. H. Johnson's residence here.

St. Peter.—Annual report of Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha shows decrease of $1,062,492.72 for fiscal year, as compared to previous year.

Mankato.—Herbert, the twenty months' old child of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Fallenstein, drank some gasoline this forenoon while playing about the house, and died shortly afterward.

Minneapolis.—As has been the custom for several years when weather conditions have been nearly normal, the saw mills of the Twin Cities and vicinity will close about Nov. 10.

Duluth.—Mayor Haven, who is chairman of forest fire relief commission, declares report that too much money has been subscribed is unauthorized and unjustified.

Filial Devotion.

Once the congressman asked Pete why he had never married.

"Why, boss," explained Pete, "Ise got an ole mudder. I had to do for her, suh. Ef I doan' buy her shoes an' stockings she doan't git none. Now, boss, you see ef I was t' git married I'd have t' buy 'em f' mah wife, an' dat'd be takin' de shoes an' stockings right outer my ole mudder's mouf."—Harper's Weekly.

Youthful Criminals.

Two bad little boys were standing on the street corner, when another well-dressed little boy passed on his way to the drug store to buy candy.

"Let's take his penny away from him," one bad boy suggested to the other.

"No," replied his wicked companion, "it's best to wait until he goes in and buys chocolate with it, and then we'll steal the chocolate. Wot's the use of doin' extra work?"

A Warning.

Handsome Percy Hasbrooke, the young chauffeur, drew the girl more closely to him.

"All the world loves a lover, dearest," he whispered.

But Lotta Golde's red lip curled somewhat skeptically.

"You haven't interviewed papa yet, Percy," she warned him.

With an ominous moaning sound the great car sped on.

NO GUSHER

But Tells Facts About Postum.

"We have used Postum for the past eight years," writes a Wis. lady, "and drink it three times a day. We never tire of it.

"For several years I could scarcely eat anything on account of dyspepsia, bloating after meals, palpitation, sick headache—in fact was in such misery and distress I tried living on hot water and toast for nearly a year.

"I had quit coffee, the cause of my trouble, and was using hot water, but this was not nourishing.

"Hearing of Postum I began drinking it and my ailments disappeared, and now I can eat anything I want without trouble.

"My parents and husband had about the same experience. Mother would often suffer after eating, while yet drinking coffee. My husband was a great coffee drinker and suffered from indigestion and headache.

"After he stopped coffee and began Postum both ailments left him. He will not drink anything else now and we have it three times a day. I could write more but am no gusher—only state plain facts."

Old Joe's Grubstake

By Edith King Latham

(Copyright, by Shortstory Pub. Co.)

Old Joe Cunnill was a picturesque feature of life in Sauger's Pass, although the townspeople were not greatly impressed with the quaint side of the old man's character. To them it was an old story, once both comical and pathetic, but now grown stale from frequent reading.

Ever since the founding of Sauger's, Old Joe had figured in the history of the little mountain settlement, at first as a pioneer owner of the first stamp mill, and afterward, through the sharp vicissitudes of a miner's life, he had slipped down to his present position of the forlorn but ever-hopeful fortune seeker, his sole possessions a lanky mule, a rifle and a meager prospecting outfit. With this stock in trade, he was wont to set out on his expeditions through Siskiyou county, often traveling as far south as Redding, and sometimes washing out two or three dollars a week in gold, on the banks of the Sacramento, where it rushes through the narrow mountain canyons.

As it happened this year Old Joe Cunnill had varied his usual program by remaining all winter and well into the summer in Sauger's, and it was not until one morning in July that he and his mule were seen in marching order, slowly making their way down the country road toward the south.

Three men sitting on the veranda of the Shasta house, were discussing a new mining boom.

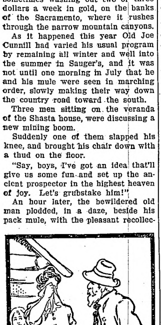
"Say, boys, I've got an idea that'll give us some fun and set up the ancient prospector in the highest heaven of joy. Let's grubstake him!"

An hour later, the bewildered old man plodded, in a daze, beside his pack mule, with the pleasant recollection of a hearty meal, and the amazing reality of three brilliant twenty-dollar gold pieces clanking their shining sides against each other in his pocket.



"She Jest Cried, She Was So Glad to See Me."

The grubstake was kept a secret between the three partners of Old Joe, who amused themselves by mysterious allusions to a wonderfully rich new syndicate, but no amount of argument could persuade them to reveal more than this. The rumor grew that the mill owner, the storekeeper and the hotel man had had a quiet tip on a big thing, and the town was prepared for the announcement that the syndicate had bought out the place, or that monster improvements were to be introduced at Sauger's. But they were totally unprepared for the announcement which burst upon the little town toward the last of October.

The postmaster received word from his brother-in-law, Charley Mason, who farmed between Shasta and Redding, that old Joe Cunnill had struck "pay dirt!" The portion of the letter concerning Joe's fortunes ran as follows:

> . . . Big piece of news for Sauger's! Spread it around. Old Joe has made his strike at last. He's in it this time, sure; got another feller's claim cheap. Didn't wait for the assay, but experts say it's the sure thing. Better make a little fuss over the old feller, "welcome home," etc. It was all quite sudden. Let me know how he got home. I'm going down to S. F. to-morrow.
>
> Forgot to say Joe leaves on the 11:40 train Thursday morning.
>
> Yours, CHARLEY.

The news spread like wildfire through Sauger's, and, in less than an hour after the letter was read, everybody knew the story of the three double eagles and their sequel. The three men who had grubstaked the successful miner were the most surprised of all. A reception committee was appointed to welcome the lucky miner.

On Thursday morning Sauger's rose early and decorated the buildings on Main street with garlands of spruce and fir, and cotton flags left over from the last Fourth of July celebration.

Half an hour before train time, the platform of the little railway station was crowded with expectant Saugerites. All the jokes of the past six months were revived to while away the long moments before the train was due, but no joke was as potent to bring a laugh as the idea of the entire town of Sauger's Pass turning out to honor the arrival of Old Joe Cunnill, whom, three months before, the very dogs had not considered worth a bark.

An echoing whistle from far down the canyon at last brought silence, and the crowd made way for the reception committee to step close to the track. With a warning screech from the engine and a clanging of the bell, the train swept around a curve, rumbled over the bridge, and stopped, puffing impatiently. Sauger's held its breath.

As the engine began to gather momentum slowly, in puffy jerks, for the up-grade run, there was spilled from the second day coach an accumulation of females of assorted sizes, which piled up in a heap on the cindery path beside the track, then rose, one by one, and meekly tagged the steps of Joseph Cunnill, capitalist.

The train crept out of sight around the curve, but Sauger's did not know it. The brass band was silent, and the reception committee stood stock still, and stared stupidly. The committee, at last, regained its presence of mind, and stepped up to Old Joe, but Sauger's guest of honor was timidly making for the trail behind the station, which was the short cut to the town. Isaac Pendleton stopped him. "Here, Joe, old fellow, you ain't goin' to give us the cold shoulder, are you? What you in such a hurry for?"

"Ask—ask her; she'll tell ye," he stammered, pointing behind him. The gaze of the crowd was transferred to the aggregation of females, which presented a shrinking front to the public eye.' The oldest, of about 45 summers, unkempt and forlorn-eyed, gathered the youngest, aged two, to her breast, grouped around her the remaining seven, ranging from 18 down, and cast her eyes on the ground in frightened confusion. The old miner braced himself, and turned bravely toward the crowd. "Well, ye see, Mr. Pendleton," he said, keeping his eye on the mild-faced storekeeper, "it was somethin' like this. I was prospectin' "—a smile went the rounds of the crowd—"an' that night the mule died, an' I was peggin' along afoot, kinder lonesome, an' I come across, down the creek, a woman and eight kids what their husband and father had died a week before, and she'd been doin' odd jobs 'round the diggin's and was clean beat out an' lonely-like. Well, when I come along, she jest cried, she was so glad to see me, 'cause I looked like her old dad, an' the children called me grandpap. An' she was goin' to pull up stakes an' make tracks for the poor farm. So I sez: 'Come along with me to the parson's, the one what peddles his gospel talk through the minin' country,' sez I, because there didn't seem to be nothin' else to do, seein's how she didn't have no pertector. An' I thought mebbe ye wouldn't be terrible put out, gentlemen, if I used the rest of the money to come back to Sauger's an' set up Mely an' the children."

The crowd was very quiet.

"But what about your pile, Joe?" asked Spandling after a moment. "How much, and where did you make the strike?"

"Strike?" repeated Joe in bewilderment. "I didn't make none this time, 'less Mely's the strike."

A groan ran through the multitude, disappointment was pictured on a hundred faces, some looked fairly menacing. It was not often that Sauger's bestirred itself as it had for this occasion which had ended so absurdly. They would be a butt for the ridicule of the whole county.

Suddenly, the hotel man stepped up to the woman and spoke to her in a low tone. Then he faced the crowd.

"Boys, you're scarin' the poor critturs to death, with the tender feelin' for Charley Mason glarin' out of your eyes. The reception committee will be responsible for the drawin' up of a testimonial to that gentleman; you leave that to us. But we're a pack of fools, just the same, not to see that this is the biggest joke in California, bigger than the Barneses' strike. If Old Joe didn't bring back nine times more than we expected, then I'm crazy. Whoever heard of a claim that panned out such nuggets as these here?" pointing to the eight young women. "I find," he continued, "that this estimable lady, Mrs. Joseph Cunnill, is a past master at the wash tub. What do you say to setting her up in 'The Grubstake Laundry,' and requesting that heathen clothes-destroyer, Chin Lee, to seek another sheep-range?"

Sauger's gave a lusty roar. Clark had touched a vulnerable spot. Every man who wore a collar clutched at its ragged edges with one hand, and threw his hat in the air with the other.

The 'bus was filled with Sauger's guests on its way to town, and the imported band was not wasted. It was not equal to the "Wedding March," but Old Joe and his wife and her progeny rode in state to supper at the Shasta house quite as blissfully to the tune of "A Hot Time in the Old Town To-Night."

CHASE'S COACH GIFT TO NATION.

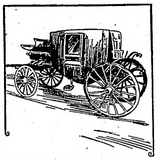
Venerable Vehicle in Which Lincoln Rode Is Well Preserved.

Washington.—An interesting relic of bygone days is soon to be presented to Uncle Sam for exhibition in one of the Washington museums. It is the old-fashioned coach which was used by Salmon P. Chase, back in the fifties.

For 24 years the vehicle has occupied an inconspicuous place in the salesrooms of Charles O. Young's carriage house. Now Mr. Young says he proposes to present the carriage to the government free of any cost.

It is his hope that it may be made an exhibit in the National museum.

The venerable coach was probably constructed about 60 years ago. It is still in good state of preservation, for in those olden times vehicles and other things were constructed solidly and to withstand the ravages of time, like the fabled "parson's one-hoss shay."



Chase's Chaise to Be Presented to the Government.

In 1862 the old coach was said to be the handsomest equipage in Washington. It transported through the streets the reigning society queen of that time, the daughter of Salmon P. Chase, or, as she is remembered, Mrs. Kate Chase Sprague.

The vehicle is quaint and bulky and sadly out of date. But it bears many traces of departed elegance. A well-worn footboard in its rear was for the liveried footmen in their buff and green suits. They held on by two thick strap handles.

The front box seat for the driver is draped like that of a hearse of to-day. The interior of the coach is lined with heavy lilac satin, which is likewise well preserved. The carriage has a seating capacity for six people.

Chase, when secretary of the treasury in 1861, rode in the coach back and forth from his office. Many distinguished men of that time on occasions rode with him. It is related that no less a personage than Abraham Lincoln, who had an aversion to carriages, rode with Chase in the old coach more than once.

It has much the appearance of more ancient colonial coaches, and has a platform in the rear for trunks and other luggage. The coat of arms of Rhole Island was emblazoned on the doors by order of Mrs. Kate Chase Sprague, in honor of her husband's state. The design is still bright and well preserved. The doors have inside ivory handles, with silver handles on the outside and also silver axle caps.

Mr. Young's father got the coach in exchange for a more modern vehicle from Mrs. Kate Chase Sprague after her divorce from Sprague, when she had resumed the name of Chase.

The carriage is hung with steel springs and bears other marks of the ante-bellum days. Its value now is as a relic.

NEW GOVERNOR OF MAINE.

Bert M. Fernald Is Wealthy Farmer and Canner.

Portland, Me.—Bert M. Fernald, who has been elected governor of Maine, is a wealthy farmer and proprietor of a large cannery. He has a farm of 300 acres at South Poland that is one of the finest in the east, and lives on it because he prefers it to a city home. Born on a farm, he has lived on one all his life. Mr Fernald is 50 years old. His education from books was meager, because at the age of 13 he became a bread winner, but his contact with men and affairs has made him well informed and polished. RAISED FROM SICK BED.

After All Hope Had Vanished.

Mrs. J. H. Bennett, 59 Fountain St., Gardiner, Me., says: "My back used to trouble me so severely that at last I had to give up. I took to my bed and stayed there four months, suffering intense pain, dizziness, headache and inflammation of the bladder. Though without hope, I began using Doan's Kidney Pills, and in three months was completely cured. The trouble has never returned."

MINISTER A TRIFLE MIXED UP.

Consequently There Was an Awkward Perhaps in Funeral Oration.

It was at the funeral of a man who had left his young and attractive helpmeet a widow for the third time. At the time of his death their clergyman was away on a European trip, and in this emergency the Rev. Dr. Blank was called upon.

A neighbor instructed him hastily as to the admirable qualities of the deceased, his benevolence, piety and kind disposition, and gave him various points as to his family relations. During the funeral discourse no outsider would have suspected that the clergyman had not been a lifelong friend of the dead man. When, however, he came to mention the widow in his prayer, it was evident that his data in regard to her had become a trifle confused. He said:

"And now we commend to thy care this widowed handmaid, who has been bereaved again and again and again.' Then hesitating an instant, he added: "And perhaps again."

SKIN TROUBLES CURED.

First Had Itching Rash—Threatened Later With Blood-Poison in Leg—Relied on Cuticura Remedies.

"About twelve or fifteen years ago I had a breaking-out, and it itched, and stung so badly that I could not have any peace because of it. Three doctors did not help me. Then I used some Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment, and Cuticura Resolvent and began to get better right away. They cured me and I have not been bothered with the itching since, to amount to anything. About two years ago I had la grippe and pneumonia which left me with a pain in my side. Treatment ran it into my leg, which then swelled and began to break out. The doctor was afraid it would turn to blood-poison. I used his medicine but it did no good, then I used the Cuticura Remedies three times and cured the breaking-out on my leg. J. F. Hennen, Milan, Mo., May 13, 1907."

How It Felt.

An Irish maid in the service of a Washington family recently sought permission of her mistress to take an afternoon off for the purpose of consulting a dentist.

Upon her return, the mistress said: "Well, Rosalie, did you have the tooth filled?"

"I did, mum."

"And what did the dentist fill it with—gold or amalgam?"

"I don't know just what it was, mum; but from the way I feel, I should think it was with thunder and loightning, mum."

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury, as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. ## HE REMEMBERED.

"And did your uncle remember you in his will?"

"Well, he remembered me, all right, but that was why he didn't mention me in it."

Arrange for Pure Milk.

Chicago has a medical cow. She was bought by a woman health department inspector. Dr. Caroline Hedger, to produce pure milk for desperately sick babies in a crowded tenement district, and, according to reports, this latest Chicago experiment in municipal ownership has been a great success. "I purchased the cow for the department," said Dr. Hedger. "I told Commissioner Evans I needed a cow to save the lives of the sick babies out my way, and he told me to buy one; so I did. Some friends of mine are taking care of her, milking her and taking the milk direct to the sick infants. It doesn't go through a dozen hands before it reaches the babies. We get enough milk to supply the babies of 14 families."

Temporarily Indisposed.

One of the workers in a Chinese mission in Philadelphia became interested in two Chinamen who, she found, owned a flourishing laundry business in her own home neighborhood. She looked in once in awhile to see how things were going with them, and one morning found Sam smiling and cheerful, as usual, but John was missing.

"Where is John this morning?" she asked.

"Oh," answered Sam amiably, "Chlistian gen'leman hit him in the head with a blick, and he all same in hospital"

Australia's Wild Oysters.

Oysters are sometimes regarded as dangerous but they are not usually considered savage. A Queensland judge, however, has decided that they are wild beasts. Before a royal commission on the pearling industry, which has been sitting at Brisbane, a witness stated that eight years ago he had laid 100,000 shells in the neighborhood of Friday island. The Japanese stole the shells, and the district court judge held that as pearl shell oysters were wild animals there was no penalty for stealing them.

Difficult Advice.

"In your campaign speeches," said the idealist, "and in your private conversation, too, you must tell people only the simple and direct truth."

"Do you know," returned the candidate thoughtfully, "I don't believe people would vote for a man who seemed as ill-natured as all that!"—Washington Star.

Gave It to Them Straight.

At a heavy transfer point on Sixth avenue, says a letter to the New York Times, few seats being vacant on a Twenty-third street car, a youth darted under the arm of a stout woman and plumped himself down in the seat she was about to occupy. Glaring, she hurled at him: "If I wasn't a perfect lady I'd swat you one on the mouth." Another young man arose, raised his hat, and begged her to sit down. When seated she beamed upon him and said: "Sir, you're a gentleman; them others is hogs."

WOMAN'S BACKACHE

The back is the mainspring of woman's organism. It quickly calls attention to trouble by aching. It tells, with other symptoms, such as nervousness, headache, pains in the loins, weight in the lower part of the body, that a woman's feminine organism needs immediate attention.

In such cases the one sure remedy which speedily removes the cause, and restores the feminine organism to a healthy, normal condition is

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND

Mrs. Will Young, of 6 Columbia Ave., Rockland, Me., says:

"I was troubled for a long time with dreadful backaches and a pain in my side, and was miserable in every way. I doctored until I was discouraged and thought I would never get well. I read what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done for others and decided to try it; after taking three bottles I can truly say that I never felt so well in my life."

Mrs. Augustus Lyon, of East Earl, Pa., writes to Mrs. Pinkham:

"I had very severe backaches, and pressing-down pains. I could not sleep, and had no appetite. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cured me and made me feel like a new woman."

FACTS FOR SICK WOMEN.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has positively cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration.

Sale of Ditching Jobs.

Notice is hereby given, That on the 12th day of October 1908, at one o'clock P. M., at the office of the county Auditor in the city of Red Lake Falls, Minnesota, I will sell the jobs of digging and constructing the Ditch No. 31 of Red Lake County, established by the Board of County Commissioners of Red Lake County State of Minesota, by their order bearing date September 18th 1908, viz: For the work as one job, and also for one or more sections of 100 feet each, and also for one or more of the construction jobs, each of said sections to be known and numbered by stakes as shown by the report of the engineer in said matter, commencing at the one including the outlet, and from thence, successively up stream to the one including the source said sections being numbered from station "0" to station 268 inclusive, to the lowest responsible bidder or bidders, and that bids are invited for said work; said work to be completed within the time required, and in the manner specified, in said, engineer's report And no bid will be entertained which exceeds more than thirty (30) per cent. over and above the estimate cost of the construction, in any case, as stated in the said order; and the successful bidder will be required to give a satisfactory bond, to be approved by the Auditor of said county, with two freehold sureties, for the faithful performance and fulfilment of his contract, and to pay all damages that may accrue by reason of his failure to complete the job within the time required in the contract. The said order and estimates and profile are on file and may be seen at my office.

The approximate amount of work to be done in the construction of said ditch is as follows:

The excavation and removal of 50,621 cubic yards of earth. Under the head of excavation shall be included all excavation required for the formation of the ditch, the altering of the highways or private roads, and excavation connected in any way with the proper construction of said ditch, and the hauling and depositing of the material excavated so as to form a turnpike or grade along the west side of said ditch from section 20 to section 79-15 inclusive, and from station 79-15 to station 131-55. The grade or turnpike shall be upon the north side of the ditch, and from station 131-55 to station 268 the material excavated shall be placed along the west side of the ditch. The engineer reserves the right to change the place of the excavation along the ditch as the occasion or conditions may require at any time during the progress of the work.

The estimated cost of the work is $3,263.12.

All bids must be accompanied by a certified check payable to the Auditor of said county, for not less than ten per cent. of the amount of each bid.

The right to reject any and all bids is hereby reserved.

Dated September 22nd. 1908.

A Clock Case Made of Pennies.

A novelty in clockmaking consists of a timepiece whose case is made of English pennies. The coins, of which there are ninety-six, all bear the date 1797 and were beaten out to almost double their original size and then riveted together, while the figures were made of small strips of copper cemented on to the face. The clock stands fourteen inches high and is eight inches broad at the base. That "time is money" is an adage with which we all more or less agree, but this is a case in which the saying might be reversed and still remain true. The clock is owned by a resident of Laurel Bank, Ilkley, Yorkshire, England.

NOTICE OF TAX SALE

Of Unredeemed Lands in Red Lake County, Minnesota, Under Sections 936, 937 and 938, Revised Laws of 1905, as Amended by Chapter 430, General laws of 1907.

Pursuant to the provisions of Sections 936, 937 and 938 of the Revised Laws of 1905, as amended by Chapter 430 General laws of 1907, notice is hereby given that on Monday the 9th day of November, 1908, at 10 o.clock in the forenoon, at the office of the County Auditor in the county Court House at Red Lake Falls in Red Lake County, Minnesota, all tracts or parcels of land, situate in Red Lake County bid in for the State, and not assigned to purchasers or redeemed within three years from the date of the tax sale at which said parcel were offered and so bid in by the State, will be offered at public sale, and will be sold to the highest bidder therefor. No parcel will be sold for a less sum than the aggregate taxes, penalties, interests and costs charged against it, unless the cash value thereof fairly determined by the State Auditor, shall be less than such aggregate, provided, however that all parcels bid in for the state, for taxes of 1901, or prior years, and not assigned to purchasers, or redeemed as above, [illegible] be disposed of for one-half of the total tax as originally assessed. Purchasers shall forthwith pay the amount of their respective bids to the County Treasurer. Said sale will begin at the time and place named above and will continue from day to day until every such tract or parcel shall have been offered for sale, under the provisions of said statutes. The list of said real property subject to said sale, and which will be so offered for sale, unless previously redeemed, is now on file in the office of said County Auditor, and of the State Auditor of said State.

Owners, or interested parties may redeem their property by paying the full amount due to the county Treasurer, at any time before sale, and within sixty (60) days after proof of service of the Notice of Expiration of Redemption has been filed with the County Auditor.

After the Notice of Expiration of Redemption has been served, as provided in Section 956, Revised Laws 1905, the Governor is authorized to issue a deed in the name of the State to the person entitled thereto. (See Section 938 R. L.)

Marlin

For shooting the swift flying, heavily feathered ducks and geese the Marlin 12-gauge repeating shotgun has no superior. This gun is exceedingly strong in construction and yet is not heavy. It is bored to throw an excellent pattern with great penetration. The solid top keeps out the weather and the brush and twigs of the blind, and the side ejector prevents the empty shells from being a nuisance to the shooter. It's the best bad weather gun.

The Marlin 12-gauge is suited to all forms of bird and trap shooting, and for durability, strength and ease of action is unexcelled. Made for both black and smokeless powders and for heavy loads. Two separate extractors make sure work.

HALVOR STEENERSON

Of Crookston, Minn., the Republican Candidate for Re-election to Congress From the Ninth District.

Halvor Steenerson was born in Wisconsin in 1852, but has been a resident of Minnesota since 1853, his parents, who were among the earliest pioneers, having settled on a pre-emption in the southeastern part of the state in that year. He was reared on a farm and educated in the state schools and in the Union college of Law in Chicago; admitted to the bar in 1878, removed to Crookston in 1880; was elected county attorney that year and state senator in 1882, where he took a leading part in the enactment of the first law for the regulation of railroads, and creating the railroad and warehouse commission of this state, which has been the foundation of all subsequent legislation on the subject. In 1893 he initiated the celebrated grain rate case which was the first instance where the rate making power of the state over its railroads was judicially determined and finally established.

He was elected to congress in 1902 and re-elected in 1904 and 1906. He has served continuously during this time as a member of the committee on postoffice and post roads and of the militia, of which latter committee he is chairman. During Mr. Steenerson's service on the postoffice committee many important reforms have been enacted. Rural free delivery has been extended to nearly every country home, the compensation of rural carriers increased from $600 to $720, and last year to $900. The compensation of clerks and carriers in city offices and of railway mail clerks has also been equitably adjusted and increased, while the compensation of the railways for transporting the mails has been reduced so as to result in an annual saving of more than eight millions of dollars, thus more than making up for the increased compensation to clerks and carriers.

In order to carry out the recommendations of President Roosevelt and Secretary of War Taft for the strengthening of our national defenses, Mr. Steenerson, as chairman of the committee on the militia, introduced in the last session of congress the bill to promote the efficiency of the militia and forced it through the house against the opposition of both Republican and Democratic floor leaders. The passage of this bill against such opposition fixed Mr. Steenerson's position in the house as one of the strong men of that body, whose influence will count for a great deal in the future. This is one of the laws the passage of which is especially commended in the Republican national platform and by the president.

Mr. Steenerson took a strong stand both in the Fifty-ninth congress and in the last session for tariff revision. He introduced two bills providing for a tariff commission, and urged their consideration upon the committee on ways and means. It was largely through his efforts that a resolution was finally agreed upon in the last session of congress under which all questions relating to the subject of tariff revision and readjustment are now being investigated by the committees of the senate and house preparatory to revision early next year

He has also taken an active part in legislation for the regulation of railroads, concerning public lands, Indians, drainage and conservation of natural resources.

In addition to these matters of general concern, Mr. Steenerson has also secured the passage of a large number of private bills, such as private pension bills, public building bills, relief of soldiers, granting permission to build bridges and dams over navigable streams, and for the relief of settlers on the public domain. It may be interesting to learn that Mr. Steenerson secured the enactment at the last session of congress of no less than twenty-four bills of a special nature, as follows: 12 pension bills, 2 drainage bills, 2 bridge and 1 dam bills, 2 public buildings, 1 making [illegible] Vincent a port of entry for the immediate transportation of merchandise, and 5 granting relief to settlers on the public lands.

The work of a representative does not end with matters of legislation, however. He is constantly called upon to aid in the administration of the law through the different executive departments. The establishment of new rural and star routes, the expediting of the service thereon, the improvement or change in railway mail service; the appointment of postmasters; the remedying of grievances of men in the civil service of the government; the adjustment of claims against the government for mail contractors, survey contracts and like claims. The allowance of pension claims of old soldiers and their widows, and customs claims, the aiding of persons whose relatives have been excluded under immigration laws, securing of government protection to citizens abroad, obtaining passports, the distribution of government free publications are only a few things that a congressman has to attend to. In fact, these services in behalf of the people who are concerned with the government at Washington in its various branches and activities are more onerous than the legislative duties of a member of congress.

Mr. Steenerson has given his time and best efforts to his constituents without regard to party affiliations and that his services are appreciated is evidenced by the fact that he has just been nominated for the fourth term without opposition.

When he was elected to congress, there were only nine rural routes established in the district; now there are more than 150, with complete county service in Otter Tail and Clay and part of Becker county, bringing the daily mail to every farmer's home, thereby increasing the attractiveness and convenience of home life upon the farm.

As early as his first election to congress, Mr. Steenerson announced as his platform and program the same measures for the regulation of interstate railroads and of monopolistic combinations or trusts as he has since helped to enact ino law under the administration of President Roosevelt, and which, if elected, he will help to perfect and make more efficient as experience has shown to be necessary.

While in congress he has shown his independence, and has often been counted among the "insurgents" and opposed to Speaker Cannon, and he long ago announced that he was independent on the speakership, and favored such amendments to the house rules as would limit the present power of the speaker without destroying the power of majority to do business.

Before his advent in congress, Mr. Steenerson achieved a high place at the bar, and was especially successful in cases brought by him in behalf of laborers and employes of railroads and other industrial corporations to recover damages for personal injuries or death by reason of negligence of the employer.

In his Barnesville speech, Sept. 28, Mr. Taft, who was introduced by Mr Steenerson, said: "I am glad to stand up by your tall congressman and congratulate you on having such a representative. He does you honor in Washington and looks after your interests, as I can assure you."

To The Voters.

I have received the Republican nomination for the office of Register of Deeds, I am a candidate for re-election. I ask a second term on the merits of my work in the office only. I invite all the voters to look over the work and see wehther or not it is satisfactory.

If you find that you can conscientiously snpport me at the coming election I will greatly appreciate your vote and any good word that you may say in my behalf.

Very truly yours,
E. L. QUIST.

BULGARIAN SITUATION.

Germany has assured Turkey she will follow the lead of England in the matter of the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, so that Austria-Hungary stands alone. The Servian government believes war will be avoided.

Belgrade, the storm center in the present Balkan situation, has quieted After a long secret session, the national assembly has taken no definite action with regard to making war upon Austria-Hungary. The city itself has quieted down, the people apparently realizing that war would mean the destruction of Servian nationality. All the great powers are awaiting the result of the conferences which have been going on at London between M. Iswolsky, the Russian foreign minister, and Sir Edward Gray, the British secretary for foreign affairs, and King Edward himself.

Prince Ferdinand, as the "czar of the Balkans," made his triumphal entry into the capital amid scenes of patriotic enthusiasm. Great Britain receded from her original position and is now willing that the proposed conference of the powers to settle the crisis in the near east shall take under advisement other questions in addition to those involved in the annexation of Bosnia and Bulgarian independence. A Turkish cruiser and three torpedo boats arrived at Saloniki on the way to the Island of Samos, a Grecian possession. This is Turkey's answer to the proclamation by the Cretans of union with Greece.

GENERAL NEWS.

The American balloon St. Louis, in the international race, descended in the North sea in the night and its pilots, N. H. Arnold and H. J. Hewitt, narrowly escaped death, being rescued by a lifeboat. The America II., piloted by Capt. McCoy, landed in a tree top a few feet from the steep cliffs on the shore of the Baltic.

A ten-pound note of the English colony of New York, issued February 16, 1771, has been presented to Comptroller Metz of New York with a request for payment. Its redemption, with interest, would cost the city about $39,000.

CUBS AGAIN BLANK THE TIGERS

WORLD'S CHAMPIONSHIP GOES TO CHICAGO BY WINNING FOUR GAMES.

Detroit Gives Way to a Better Team; Donovan Pitches a Good Game But Mates Can't Hit. Overall Allows But 3 Hits.

Detroit, Mich., Oct. 15.—Chicago's Cubs three times National league champions, yesterday won their second world's championship, beating the Tigers 2 to 0 in a fast and hard fought game.

By winning yesterday, Chance's team accomplished a feat never before performed in baseball—and climaxed their wonderful fight to retain their title by a grandly won victory.

Detroit, driven to bay, desperate and fighting for the remnants of honor, sent Wild Bill Donovan back to the slab in the faint hope that he would stop the champions, but there was not a chance. Donovan's arm had weakened under the strain of his brilliant attempt to hold the Cubs on Sunday, and today he was forced to resort to trickery and slow curves, and twice at opportune times the Cubs landed on him, and manufactured two runs, enough, with one to spare.

Chance, who determined to finish the series today, and clinch the championship beyond preadventure of a reasonable doubt, chose "Big Jeff" Overall to pitch. All during the morning he hesitated between Overall and Reulbach, but Reulbach's arm was stiff from the effects of pitching in the rain on the opening day of the series, and Chance decided upon Overall. Jennings chose Donovan. It was a despairing chance, for he knew that Donovan's terrific speed was lost, and yet he hoped that Wild Bill's experience and trickery would carry him through.

Donovan pitched one of the cleverest, headiest games of the season and Overall cut loose the grandest array of curves shown in the series.

Detroit was in mourning last night. Not a house was burned down, not a bonfire lighted.

SOLONS SAVED

The Supreme Court Decide Legislators May Run Again.

Minneapolis, Oct. 14.—Members of the last Minnesota house are held to be eligible for re-election by the state supreme court, in a decision handed down early yesterday.

The opinion was given orally, and a formal memorandum and order will be filed later, but the occasion required haste, so the court announced its decision within twenty-four hours.

The petition was filed on behalf of five republican candidates, defeated in the recent legislative primaries in Hennepin county, and was directed against five republican members of last house who were renominated Sept. 15. It was alleged that they were barred from serving in the next house because of an act passed in 1907 raising the pay of members to $500 a year. Article 4, section 9 of the state constitution says that no senator or representative may hold any office under authority of the state which was created or the emoluments of which were increased at the session of which he was a member, till a year after the expiration of his term.

HEAVY REGISTRATION

Crowds Flock to Dallas, S. D., to Get Rich Land.

Dallas, S. D., Oct. 14.—Young William Stillman, nephew of James Stillman of the National City bank of New York, has decided to turn farmer and has come to this point to register for the opening of the Rosebud Sioux Indian reservation. Stillman reached here yesterday and after registering will return to Omaha, where he is secretary of the Union Depot company.

High-water mark in registration of Rosebud county farms was reached Monday, when 10,140 applications were made at the different places of registration. Practically every state of the Union was represented today.

A letter was received from Mrs. G. L. Morehouse of New York city, claiming to be the wife of the only living son of a Revolutionary soldier, asking that her husband now eighty-one years old, be allowed to register without making the journey to South Dakota.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Shot by Policeman.

Minneapolis. — Theodore Hedine, five and a half years old and residing with his parents at 2436 Thirty-second avenue south, was shot through the eye and killed, and Miss Julia Churchill, 2341 Twenty-eighth avenue south, was disfigured probably for life in Minneapolis Sunday night by shots fired by Officer John Connoly of the South Side station.

The shooting occurred while Officer Connoly was trying to arrest Ernest Dwinell for drunkenness and disorderly conduct shortly before six o'clock at Twenty-seventh avenue and Twenty-fifth street south, in a district which is known as "the Hub of Hell."

When the officer attempted to make the arrest he was attacked by a band of rowdies who tried to get Dwinell away from him. The officer fired one shot to frighten them, and this shot struck the ground, glanced upward, and struck the Hedine boy, who was standing with his father on the opposite corner, about 150 feet distant.

Resort Burns.

White Bear.—Wildwood, the popular summer resort on the shores of White Bear Lake, was swept by a conflagration last night that caused a loss estimated at between $50,000 and $75,000 and destroyed most of the buildings in the park. The losers by the fire are the Twin City Rapid Transit company, which owns the buildings, and H. M. Barnet, who operates the amusement privileges and the pavilion. The company places its loss at about $40,000, with 70 per cent insurance, and Mr. Barnet estimates that his loss will be between $15,000 and $20,000, fully covered by insurance.

The fire started in the kitchen of the pavilion and was discovered by Andrew Peterson, the night watchman, who attempted to put out the fire, but a stiff breeze, blowing from the lake, quickly put the flames beyond his control, and in an incredibly short time the entire structure was enveloped in flames.

Big Game.

America.—Big game is becoming more numerous in the vicinity of the Lake of the Woods. More members of the bear family have been killed this season in eastern Roseau county than in many years. Charles McLane of Warroad already has nineteen black bears to his credit, all killed by him in the rocky fastnesses bordering the northwest shore of the Lake of the Woods.

That the numerous forest fires are in part responsible for the increased number of bears in this section is probable, although black bear, with an occasional brown bear, were frequently seen prior to the forest fires.

Moose and deer are also apparently increasing in numbers.

Vandals at Chisholm.

Chisholm.—The month just closed has been the heaviest in municipal court work in the history of the village. The receipts from fines have amounted to over $1,300. A room in the schoolhouse has been fitted up as a jail, with cells taken from the burned jail, and on the average four intoxicated men a day are either compelled to pay fines or are sent to the temporary jail.

The fire is indirectly the cause of an increase in crime. Pickpockets, thieves and toughs came in to ply their trade. The next month will probably bring the court records down again to practically where they were before the fire.

School Apportionment.

St. Paul.—State Superintendent J. W. Olsen certified to the state auditor the lists of the several classes of schools entitled to special state aid for the year ending July 31, 1908.

On account of the increase in the number of schools that have qualified for the aid, the appropriations are not sufficient to admit of each school receiving the full amount to which it is actually entitled under the law. It will be necessary to ask the legislature to make a deficiency appropriation. State high schools are entitled to $1,500 each, graded to $550, semi-graded to $250, first class rural to $125 and second class rural to 50.

STEEL KING GIVES $16,000,000 TO HIS CHILDREN.

W. H. Singer of Pittsburg Places Riches to Extent of $4,000,000 at Plate of Each Child on Occasion of His Golden Wedding.

Pittsburg, Pa.—At the golden wedding dinner of himself and wife, W. H. Singer, an iron king, distributed $16,000,000 among his four children, each getting $4,000,000. Through the filing of certain papers in the Allegheny county courthouse the other day this came out. It later was admitted by the Singer family.

Mr. Singer invited his children to the family home, 934 Western avenue, Allegheny, to assist in celebrating his golden wedding anniversary on May 27. None but the children was invited, and each one found by his or her plate a small dinner "favor" of checks, bonds and deeds amounting to $4,000,000 each.

George Singer, iron manufacturer of Pittsburg, now in the White mountains on his vacation.

Mrs. William Ross Proctor, wife of a Philadelphia architect.

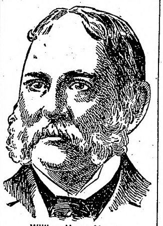
Mrs. Singer, who has a fortune of her own, received several pieces of valuable real estate as her golden wedding present.

Mr. Singer made his fortune as a member of the famous iron firm of Singer, Nimick & Co. He also was connected with many banking institutions in Pittsburg, and is considered one of the rich men of the country, his wealth remaining, after giving his children their fortunes, being $15,000,000. The family is considered one of the oldest and best in Pittsburg.



William Henry Singer.

A peculiar feature of the case was made known recently. William Henry Singer, the son who chose painting rather than the iron business as his life's work, will not be able to enjoy his millions in America, owing to the great fear his wife holds of the "Black Hand." She recently received a threatening letter, and it frightened her into hysterics. Her husband was finally compelled to take her abroad.

The elder Singer declined to discuss his remarkable dinner party further than to say it was a private matter. It is known, however, that the iron king is but following out the policy laid down by his lifelong friend, Charles Lockhart of the Standard Oil Company, who some years before his death called all his children into a dinner party and under each plate was found a check for $1,000,000.

Mr. Lockhart and Mr. Singer many years ago promised each other they would distribute their wealth among their children "in time to do the children some good."

Parrot Hurt Trade.

"I just bought this parrot from a butcher," said the sailor. "It's a rare sort—a gold beak. I got it at a bargain, too—a dollar. The butcher had paid six dollars for it. But it seems the man what sold it to him was a practical joker. He had knowed the parrot was to ornament a butcher shop, and he taught it to say the wust thing possible for such a locality.

"This here parrot didn't last long, for from his perch above the butcher's scales he kep' a-singin' out in a sarcastic voice:

Ice in Milk.

Not long ago a child took typhoid fever, apparently without coming in contact with any germs, as the milk it drank, on being analyzed, was found to be pure.

Finally it was discovered that the nurse was in the habit of adding lumps of ice to the milk to cool it more quickly, and the contamination came from that.

Besides this danger, the ice lessens the nutritive value of the milk. It will be quite cold enough if the bottles are kept in the refrigerator; or, when it is to be cooled hurriedly, the glass or bottle can be plunged in a bowl of cracked ice.

DISINFECTING THE ONLY PREVENTIVE

Borax, a Simple, Safe and Sure Method.

How to keep our homes clean, sweet and free from germ influences is a question.

While there is no occasion for alarm, it is always well to be forearmed on the theory that "An Ounce of Prevention Is Better Than a Pound of Cure," and no ounce of prevention has yet been discovered that is more simple, more direct and more effective, yet harmless to the human system, than Borax.

Borax has been known and used for generations as a purifier and preventive against epidemic influences originating from uncleanly conditions resulting from unsanitary sinks and drains, and when used as a hot solution in the proportion of two tablespoonfuls to a gallon of hot water flushed through the offending locations, removes every trace of disease germs and renders the pipes clean and wholesome.

Borax in addition to its hygienic qualities, is a household necessity, and can be used for numberless domestic purposes. It softens the water, makes linen dazzling white, will cleanse every article in the kitchen or dining room and make it bright, will prevent moths, soften and whiten the skin, remove dandruff and cleanse the scalp, and for cleansing and sterilizing baby's milk bottle and nipple has no equal.

Borax, unlike every other cleanser and disinfectant, is absolutely harmless to the system, and is safe, simple, economical, and can be purchased at any druggist or grocery. A dainty book in colors, called the "Jingle Book," will be sent free to any Mother sending name and address of her baby and tops from two one-pound cartons of "20-Mule-Team" Borax, with 5c in stamps. ### A QUESTION OF OWNERSHIP.

"Hullo, there goes old Richman! I hear he's got two lovely daughters."

"No, he hasn't, only one. I've got the other."

India's Precious Metals.

It is estimated that $1,500,000,000 in gold, and perhaps as much in silver, is hidden away in the Hindu stocking. Vast quantities of the precious metals are known to be kept in the form of personal ornaments. From time immemorial India has been a reservoir into which the precious metals have flowed from all quarters of the globe, only to disappear from statistics. Could the idle wealth be drawn upon, the effect on the industrial and commercial life of the country would be very great. It is, therefore, a matter of concern to try to turn India's dormant capital to active use. It may be impossible to do it. The Oriental mind views everything in a way incomprehensible to westerners. But if only a tithe of the concealed hoards of India were vitalized a new aspect might be given to the conditions of life in England's great eastern empire.

The Truth About Grape-Nuts Food.

It doesn't matter so much what you hear about a thing, it's what you know that counts. And correct knowledge is most likely to come from personal experience.

"About a year ago," writes a N. Y. man, "I was bothered by indigestion, especially during the forenoon. I tried several remedies without any permanent improvement.

"My breakfast usually consisted of oatmeal, steak or chops, bread, coffee and some fruit.

"Hearing so much about Grape-Nuts, I concluded to give it a trial and find out if all I had heard of it was true.

"So I began with Grape-Nuts and cream, 2 soft boiled eggs, toast, a cup of Postum and some fruit. Before the end of the first week I was rid of the acidity of the stomach and felt much relieved.

"By the end of the second week all traces of indigestion had disappeared and I was in first rate health once more. Before beginning this course of diet, I never had any appetite for lunch, but now I can enjoy a hearty meal at noon time." "There's a Reason."

"Save Me" Is Cry to Detective Who Forced Awful Truth from Murderer's Lips

Dramatic Windup to Terrible Reign of Crime—New York City Wrought Up by Confession of Slayer McGloin.

[Thomas Byrnes, former superintendent of police of New York city, is world-famed. As "Inspector" Byrnes, he made a reputation which won for him the compliment of being "The Best Chief of Police" that ever guarded the metropolis. He began his police career in 1863 and only quit active service a few years ago. He established the famous "dead line" in the Wall street district beyond which no crook was permitted to wander. King Humbert of Italy knighted him as Chevalier and Officer of the Order of the Crown of Italy—but he declined the decoration saying that all the honor he wished was to be a citizen of the United States. He originated the "Third Degree" by which suspected criminals were forced, under duress, to confess and convict themselves.]

ONE crisp December morning Louis Hanier, a Frenchman, the owner of a little wine shop on West Twenty-sixth street in New York city, was found dead in the hallway of his home. The bullet of a 38-caliber revolver was discovered in the man's heart.

He had been murdered.

The French wine merchant had been doing a big holiday trade during the week before his death, and he had a large sum of money in his possession. An examination of the premises proved that the front door had been jimmied. Hanier had been murdered for his money.

And that may was Inspector Byrnes. Report after report had been made and the murderer of Louis Hanier threatened to slip away beneath an avalanche of red tape. Inspector Byrnes called for all the papers in the case, and seated at his desk in Mulberry street he pondered over the case as a skilled player would study a problem in chess.

His conclusion was that the crime had been committed by a professional burglar. The first order was that every pawnshop in the limits of Manhattan island should be visited to discover whether a 38-caliber revolver had been pledged at any time within 48 hours after the murder. Byrnes argued that while a novice might conceal the weapon a professional would cold-bloodedly attempt to realize some money out of it.

He was right.

A money lender was found who had parted with several dollars in return for the murderous weapon. The next step was to bring the pawnbroker to headquarters and have him look over the thousands of portraits in the rogues' gallery for the purpose of discovering the picture of his erstwhile customer. Page after page was turned over and photograph after photograph was exhibited, and it began to look as if the quest were to be fruitless. Just at this point the pawnbroker suddenly exclaimed:

"There's the man!"

The picture he pointed out was that of Michael McGloin, a personage well known to the police.

The third step in the plan was to locate McGloin. That was comparatively easy. He was found in the haunts of crime, and for many weary weeks he was shadowed. Every move he made was reported; every word he uttered was recorded. It required infinite patience, but the espionage resulted in the discovery that on the night of the murder McGloin had been out on a spree in the company of three of his pals, by name Thomas Moran, Frederick Banfield and Robert Morrisey.

The case had now reached a stage where caution was of the utmost importance. A single false move might ruin everything. It would be easy enough to arrest the men on suspicion, but would such a step serve the cause of justice? Inspector Byrnes evidently thought not, for he postponed that act. Professionals, who did not stop at murder, were adepts in the making of alibis, and the detective did not propose to be fooled by such a device.

He sent a woman to live with McGloin, and he supplied her liberally with money. Indeed, there were times when the murderer wore the clothes of the inspector. With Byrnes the end justified the means. McGloin did not confess to the woman—he was not the confessing kind. But she lived with him for over a month, and during that time secured enough facts which, patched together, convinced Byrnes that McGloin was the person who had murdered Hanier.

By the time the people of busy New York had forgotten all about the tragedy of West Twenty-sixth street or had consigned it to the limbo of undiscovered mysteries, Byrnes, on his part, determined that the hour had arrived to strike a decisive blow. He sent his men out and arrested McGloin, Moran, Banfield and Morrisey. Each one was apprehended on some trivial charge and they were brought to headquarters and placed in separate cells. They protested vehemently, but all to no avail. Incidentally, it might be remarked, they were taken singly, and no one of them knew of the arrest of the other. Also, each one insisted that the action of the superintendent was an outrage and a violation of the constitution, which guaranteed to every man the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Byrnes smiled grimly and said nothing.

Day after day passed and the four men remained under lock and key. Some of the subordinate officials, not being aware of the plans of the inspector, wanted to know what was to be done with the prisoners. It seemed childish, to them, to hold the men indefinitely on such trifling charges. He made no explanations, offered no excuses—simply said "wait." He cared nothing about Moran, Banfield and Morrisey, but he cared a great deal about McGloin. He wanted to make him uncomfortable—and he succeeded. In the meantime, he was carefully preparing the stage for the last big act in his little drama. He would not be hurried; he would not be cajoled. He bided his time.

It came finally, and the scene was "pulled off" in a way that made the melodrama of the modern stage seem stale and unprofitable in comparison.

One morning the inspector arrived at his office a little earlier than usual, and for a time there was a great bustle and hustle incident to the rearrangement of the office furniture. When it was concluded Byrnes leaned back in his revolving chair with a sigh of satisfaction. Then, after a sweeping survey of the room, he bent over and tapped a bell on his desk. A messenger responded. The inspector looked up sharply.

"Send down to the cellroom and bring Mike McGloin to me at once."

A glass case at headquarters contained the ropes and the black caps which had been used in the execution of famous murderers. The gruesome relics were all plainly labeled and were horrible enough to affect the nerve of the most hardened criminal. This case was rolled out into the center of the room so that it would be the first object to greet the eye of a visitor. Inspector Byrnes was seated with his back to a large window overlooking a courtyard. Near his desk was a vacant chair which, when occupied, gave the person sitting there a good view of the courtyard. All about the room were mirrors which enabled Byrnes to see all that transpired without moving from his chair.

Presently the door opened and McGloin entered. An officer who was with him quietly withdrew. The prisoner looked about him with a surly air. He turned to the inspector.

"Whatta you want with me?"

"Oh, I just wanted to have a little chat," said Byrnes affably.

"A chat," he muttered "What about?"

"About the Hanier murder," said Byrnes in a low voice, sending out the words, sharp and short, like pistol shots.

McGloin looked at him languidly. The shots had missed fire. The seasoned criminal was not to be stampeded.

"Whatta I know about it?" he said with the utmost unconcern.

"Oh," said the inspector, matching indifference with indifference, "I thought you might have heard something about it."

At that moment McGloin caught sight of the case filled with the black caps and the murderous ropes. Brynes was instantly all attention.

"Quite interesting, these," he said, and thereupon he began to tell the ghastly history connected with each of the bloody souvenirs. He dwelt upon each story lovingly as a collector would do who had a fad for gathering queer prizes. Through it all McGloin preserved a stolid look. He appeared to take little interest in the recital, which, whatever else it might seem, was engrossingly interesting. Brynes realized that he had no ordinary man to deal with. McGloin was devoid of sentiment and apparently was ignorant of emotion of any kind. The inspector moved slowly and cautiously. He had his part down to perfection. He must not overdo it. He must not show signs of impatience. He sat down at his desk and nodded pleasantly and waved his hand in the direction of the vacant chair. McGloin accepted the invitation and sat down facing the coutryard.

"Now, Mr. McGloin," said the inspector in his most purring tones, "you're a man about town and you learn most of the things that are going on, won't you tell me what you know about the Hanier murder?"

"I don't know anything about it," was the dogged reply.

The inspector arched his eyebrows in surprise.

"Don't know anything about it?" he echoed.

"No."

"You're a New Yorker?"

"Yes."

"Have you been out of the city lately?"

The prisoner darted a quick look of suspicion at his questioner. Was this a trick? He answered definatly:

"No; I haven't been out of the city for over a year. I don't have to go out of the city."

"Of course not," said the inspector soothingly.

"You read the papers, don't you?" he resumed after a pause.

"Sometimes."

"And yet you say you never heard anything about the Hanier murder."

"Oh," grunted McGloin, "of course I read about it in the papers."

"Oh, that's better—now tell me what you thought about it."

"Me? Why I didn't think anything about it."

"It was a brutal murder, wasn't it?"

"How do I know??"

"Of course you don't know—but you think it was brutal, don't you?"

"I don't think anything about it."

There was a long silence after this—a silence that began to make Mr. McGloin feel very uncomfortable. It was the very thing that Inspector Byrnes wanted. The more uncomfortable Mr. McGloin became the better it would be for Inspector Byrnes' little drama.

The two men sat facing one another. Byrnes' soft eyes had assumed their steely aspect, and he looked straight at the criminal as if he would read the very secrets of his soul. McGloin, on his part, was becoming more ill at ease every moment. He fingered his hat, averted his gaze and fidgeted around like a hen on a hot griddle.

Unexpectedly the door opened and a man entered the room. Byrnes remained immovable. He did not speak. McGloin could not restrain his curiosity. He strained his neck and beheld—the pawnbroker with whom he had pledged the revolver. He gave a little gasp, but beyond this did not betray himself. The newcomer walked over to a table in the room, laid an article there and noiselessly departed. McGloin turned around deliberately to see what the pawnbroker had left.

It was the pistol with which he had killed Hainer.

Byrnes remained perfectly silent.

This unnatural quiet was too much for McGloin. He burst out vehemently:

"What's the meaning of all this? What are you driving at? What do you want?"

"I want you to tell me all you know about the Hanier murder," was the placid response.

"I've already told you I know nothing."

"And I don't believe you," was the response, in quiet conversational tones.

Inspector Byrnes arose from his chair at this point in the interview, and going over to the table picked up the pistol and began to fondle it lovingly. He walked over to McGloin and put the weapon in his hands.

"A fine revolver, eh?"

No response.

"Just the thing to kill a man with, eh?"

McGloin shuddered and pushed the weapon back into the hands of the inspector.

Once more Byrnes sat down in his chair facing McGloin.

More silence.

Presently the inspector spoke again.

"We've got a man who was a witness of the murder on West Twenty-sixth street."

At that moment, by a pre-arranged signal, two officers crossed the courtyard guarding McGloin's pal, Thomas Moran. McGloin could see him distinctly and he became so excited that he could scarcely sit still in his chair.

"That's not all," continued the chief, "we have another man who was present on the night of the murder."

And at that psychological moment two other guards appeared in the courtyard with Frederick Banfield walking between them.

McGloin was out of his chair now gazing down into the yard with bulging eyes. The cold sweat stood out in little beads on his forehead.

"In fact," resumed the inspector, "we really have three men who know all about the murder and who are probably prepared to tell all they know."

The guards appeared again, this time leading Robert Morrisey.

McGloin turned to his inquisitor. The look in those steely eyes seemed to hold every detail of his awful secret. He could stand the strain no longer. He threw up his hands and fell on the floor in a heap, crying out:

"I did it! I did it! Stop! For God's sake, stop!"

Thus ended the most dramatic interview ever held in a police headquarters. What followed was merely detail. As soon as McGloin recovered his self-possession he sat down and confessed in detail the story of the murder of Louis Hanier.

It appears that the four rowdies had been "spotting" the shop of the French wine seller for many days. They believed that he would have a large sum of money in the house at the close of the holiday trade, and they deliberately conceived the plan of robbing the old man. They know enough about their unlawful trade to get into the shop without difficulty. They had been drinking. At any rate, they made so much noise they roused Hanier from his slumbers. He appeared on the landing at the head of the stairway partly dressed. McGloin, who was at the foot of the stairs, instinctively reached for his revolver, and pulling the trigger fired at the defenseless shopkeeper. The aim was only too true. The bullet entered the heart of Louis Hanier and he rolled down the stairs a lifeless lump of clay.

This, in substance, was the confession as it was gleaned from the lips of the murderer and his confederates. His one cry to Inspector Byrnes was:

"Save me! Save me! Do not let them hang me!"

But the grim detective, who had forced the truth from unwilling lips, made no reply to this hysterical appeal, and in due course of time, after a trial, McGloin was convicted and received the full penalty of the law as it was then administered.

He was hanged by the neck until dead

Forestry and Fire.

Some reflections that were given much publicity about the time the congress of governors met last spring now comes back to memory, bearing a twisted look. We were all very virtuous just then. We had learned to our surprise and horror that our progenitors had been unpardonably reckless in their dealings with the property they should have left intact to us. We scolded them vigorously because they had cleaned off our forests until we were within a quarter of a century of national baldness. The ghosts of those pioneers must be holding their sides when they look down on their successors in this supposedly inexhaustible region of natural affluence and behold us figuring up our fire losses for this summer. The bureau of forestry at Washington estimates that the destruction in the forests so far would equal the cost of a whole fleet of first-class battleships. That would probably amount to more than $100,000,000. Either our forefathers were not as extravagant as we have been calling them, or we ourselves have not profited by their example. The offence is the more grievous on our part since we realize how easily our forests may be exhausted. Our predecessors thought they would last forever.—Detroit Free Press.

Milk, and nothing else, is the latest cure for stout people. Prof. F. Moritz of Strasburg, the pioneer of this new dietary, declares positively that an exclusive diet of milk is the simplest, the most comfortable and cheapest remedy for obesity. A limited quantity of water may be taken, but, with this exception, the patient takes absolutely no food or drink but milk. The allowance varies in individual cases, from a little over two pints to 3½ pints daily, taken at five separate "meal times." Milk is filling and satisfying, and the patient suffers neither from hunger nor thirst. The cure is easy for the doctor to direct, and makes no great demands on the patient to carry out. As for its efficacy, Prof. Moritz says that one patient lost 56 pounds in 81 "cure days," an average of more than half a pound daily. The cure is said to be especially beneficial in all cases when the patient has any heart or kidney trouble.

The loss of money through the defalcation of M. Alberti, former minister of justice in Denmark, heavy though it is, is not the greatest injury his course will cause. He was a tremendously popular man, the peasants in particular having confidence in his integrity and financial judgment. The failure of the bank of which he was the head, through his reckless speculations and embezzlements, means a total loss of about $5,000,000, much of which consists of small savings of poor people. These people will suffer for the lack of their money, but they will suffer a greater injury in the loss of confidence in one whom they trusted, a loss that will be manifested hereafter by distrust of better men than he. The evil that such a man does lives after him.

Apropos of Prof. Darwin's theory as to the intelligence of plants, the interesting circumstance is recalled that in some lectures delivered by Prof. Josiah Royce before a class in metaphysics at Harvard a dozen years ago, he maintained that not only plants but all forms of so-called inanimate nature may have intelligence whereby they communicate with each other. He even went to the length of maintaining that we cannot logically say that those intelligences are lower than those of the human mind. We are thus again reminded that there is not much that is new under the sun nowadays either in the domain of fact or theory.

It is characteristic of Lord Rosebery as a so-called Liberal that, after attacking most of the reform policies of his party, he should propose the reform of the house of lords by the addition of a limited number of "eminent representative commoners" by election for the duration of any parliament, with eligibility for re-election. What is to be accomplished by electing only a guaranteed minority in the house of Tory lords? If the hereditary principle holds good clear through the peerage as by law conferring the exclusive right to legislate, the election of untitled members must be wrong.

The declaration of the boss dressmaker that three years are required for the proper promulgation of a new fashion in women's dress will surprise mere men who had supposed that the fashion changed instantly whenever the dressmakers took a whim.

Most of the New York papers look down with scorn on the proposition to limit the height of future buildings there to 15 stories. They take a loftier view of the subject from their higher altitudes.

Peck's Bad Boy in an Airship
By Hon. George W. Peck

HE BOMBARDS THE POPULACE

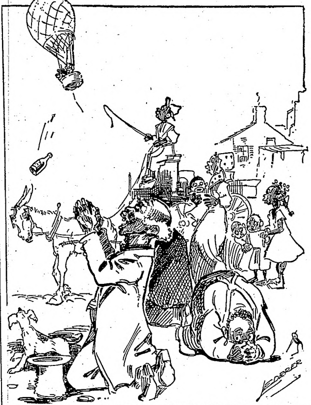
When our balloon left St. Louis, and got up in the air so far that the earth looked like a piece of rag carpet, with popcorn scattered over it, which were villages, and I realized that if anything busted, we would be dropping for hours before we struck a church steeple, and would be so dead when we hit the ground, and stiff and cold, that we would be driven down in the mud so far no one would ever find us, and I looked at the two fool men in the basket with me, who didn't seem to care what became of them, as though they were unhappily married or had money in a shaky bank, I began to choke up, and the tears came to my eyes, and I took a long breath of thin air, and fainted dead away.

When I fainted we were being driven south, and when I came to, with a smell of ammonia on my hair, we were going east, and the balloon had gone down within a mile of the earth, and the men gave me some hot tea out of a patent bottle, and pretty soon I began to enjoy myself and wonder if I could hit a mess of negroes picking cotton in a field, with a sand bag.

When you are up in the air so far that a policeman cannot reach you, you feel loose enough to insult men that would knock your block off if you should give them any lip when you were on the ground.

We came down a half a mile more, and I asked the boss man if I might throw a sand bag at the negroes, and he said I might throw a bundle of advertisements for liver pills at them, so I yelled: "Hello, you black rabbits," and when the negroes looked up and saw the balloon, they turned pale, and dropped on their knees, and I guess they began to pray, and I didn't mean to interfere with their devotions, so I threw a bottle of ginger ale at a mule hitched to a wagon near them, and when the bottle struck the mule on the head and exploded and the ginger ale began to squirt all over the colored population, the mule ran one way with the wagon, and the negroes ran for the cane brakes. The boss man in the balloon complimented me on being a good shot, and said I had many characteristics of a true balloonist, and probably before we got to the end of the trip I would get so I could hit a church steeple with a bag of ballast, and break up a Sunday school in the basement. He said that being up in the rarefied air made a man feel as though he would like to commit murder, and I found out that was so, for the next town we passed over when all the people were out in the main street, and the balloon man told me to throw over a bag of sand, so we could go up higher, instead of trying to throw the bag into a field, where there was nobody to be hurt or frightened, do you know, I shied that bag at a fountain in the public square and laughed like a crazy person when the water splashed all over the crowd, and the fountain was smashed to pieces, and the pirates in the balloon complimented me, and yet, when those men were at home, on the ground, they are Christian gentlemen, they told me, so I made up my mind that if ballooning became a fashionable pastime, those who participated in it would become murderers, and the people on the ground would shoot at a balloonist on sight.

We went up so high that we were out of sight of people on the ground, so you couldn't pick out any particular person to hit with a bundle of pickle advertisements, so you had to shoot into a flock, and run chances of winging somebody, so I did not enjoy it, but along towards evening we passed over a town in Tennessee or Kentucky, where there was a race track, and races going on, and just as we got over it I said to the boss balloon man: "Just watch me break up that show," and I pitched overboard a whole mess of advertisements of different things we carried, and two bundles hit the grand stand, and exploded, and about a million circulars advertising pills and breakfast food struck the track, and of all the stampedes you ever saw that was the worst, horses running away, riders fell off, carriages tipped over, and the people in the grand stand falling over themselves, and as we sailed along none of us seemed to care two whoops whether anybody was killed or not. It was the craziness of being up in the air, and not caring for responsibility, like a drunken chauffeur running a crazy automobile through a crowd of children, and acting mad because they were in the way of progress.



I Didn't Want to Interfere with Their Devotions So I Threw a Bottle of Ginger Ale at a Mule.

We laughed and chuckled at the sensation we had caused, but cared no more for the results than a hired girl who starts a fire with kerosene.

It came on dark after a while, and all we had to do was to look at the stars and the moon, and it seemed to me that the stars were as big as locomotive headlights, and that you could see into them, and on several of the largest stars I was sure I could see people moving, and the moon seemed so near that you could catch the smile of the man in the moon, and see him wink at you.

The two men had to remain awake all night, but after awhile I said I guessed I would have my berth made up, and the boss man handed me a shredded wheat biscuit for a pillow, and laid me down by the sand bags and the canned food, and threw a blanket over me, and I slept all night, sailing over the states, the balloon moving so still there was no sound at all.

I woke up once or twice and listened for a street car, or some noise to put me to sleep again, and found myself wishing there was a fire, so a fire department would go clanging by, making a noise that would be welcome in the terrible stillness.

I dreamed the awfulest dreams, and thought I saw pa, in another balloon, with a rawhide in his hand, chasing me, and the great bear in the heavens seemed to be getting up on his hind legs, with his mouth open, ready to hug me to his hairy chest.

It was a terrible night, and at daylight the boss man woke me up and I looked over the side of the basket and we were going across a piece of water where there were battle ships lined up like they were at Santiago, when Cevera's fleet was smashed, and the men said now was the time to demonstrate whether balloons would be serviceable in case of war, and told me to take a bundle of malted milk advertisements, and imagine it was a dynamite bomb, and see if I could land it on the deck of a big white battleship. I took a good aim and let the bundle go and it struck on the deck just in front of a cross looking old man in a white uniform, and scattered all over the deck and the sailors and marines came up on deck in a wild stampede, and threw the malted milk advertisements overboard, and as we sailed on there was an explosion of red hot language from the cross looking man in the white uniform, and the boss balloon man said: "That is a good shot, Bub, for you landed that bundle of alleged dynamite square on the deck of Admiral Bob Evans' flagship. Didn't you hear him swear?" and then we went on, and the man in the white uniform was shaking his fists and his mouth was working overtime, but we couldn't hear the brand of profanity he was emitting, but we knew he was going some, for before we got out of hearing the bugles were sounding on more than a dozen battleships, the men came up from below and took positions in the rigging and everywhere, and all was alive with action, and the boss balloon man said the fleet was preparing for its trip around the horn, to San Francisco, and then I told the balloon man that he couldn't land me a minute too quick, because I was going to join that fleet and go with Bob Evans, if I never did another thing in my life.

The inspiration came to me up there in the rarefied air, and I was as sure I was going around the horn as though I was already on one of the ships.

We sailed along part of the day and the gas began to give out, and I had to throw over ballast, and open cans of food, and bottles of stuff to drink, and I made some good shots with the sand bags and the bottles. Once I hit right in front of a brakeman on a freight train with a bottle of soda water, and again I hit an oyster schooner with a sand bag and must have chuckled at least a barrel of oysters. The gas kept escaping, and presently we came down in a field in Delaware, after I had hit a chief of police in Wilmington with a bottle of beer, which is a crime in a prohibition country, and after we landed the police arrested the two balloon men, and tied up the balloon. They paid me $30 for my services, and I took a train for Fortress Monroe to join the fleet, and left the two balloon men on the way to a whipping post.

When the Tide Turned

By George Harvey

(Copyright, by Shortstory Pub. Co.)

The following story is true in all its details, real names alone being omitted for obvious reasons.

He had the best wishes of everybody, for he was a decent boy, and all who knew him liked his manly ways.

But he found the metropolis a tough proposition. The fierce, pushing, fight-for-life workseekers jostled and crowded him beyond all his previous conceptions, and he, not having the faculty of retaliating in kind, found himself pushed to the wall.

He got employment, it is true, but he could not hold it for any length of time, owing largely to his lack of knowledge of urban conditions, and also to much bad luck.

So, after four years' struggle, he gave it up and acknowledged himself beaten. The struggle had been continuous and altogether one-sided, and as he sat upon the stringpiece of an East river pier, it was borne in upon him that he had made as good a fight as he knew how. And lost!

And now, when Failure had completely enveloped him in her somber cloak, he felt there was nothing else to do but to return to the old town. There, at least, he could live, and he among those who knew him and would sympathize with him. Of the two dollars which he possessed, one dollar would pay his fare to Providence, and it would be a small matter for him to walk the intervening miles to his old home.

This plan he carried into effect, and the evening of an early October day found him in Plymouth, which adjoined his home town. He was tired, footsore and discouraged. Plymouth always held a fascination for him, and he betook himself to the Burial hill and there, on a lonely bench, he looked down upon the lights of Market square, to the riding-lights of a few craft lying at anchor in the harbor, and further, to that great light on the Gurnet whose effulgent rays guided and warned local and coastwise mariners. Long he sat and brooded. One by one the lights were extinguished, and as the town went to sleep he felt the necessity of doing likewise. He stumbled down the narrow path to Market square, across the main street and, as though drawn by some magnet, to the water's edge. There the gray canopy with its iron gate, which shields Plymouth Rock from the vandal and the relic hunter, reared its head. Everything was familiar to Henry, yet his eye dwelt longingly on each object. Here was a short strip of pebbly beach, and drawn high up on it was a fisherman's dory. The boat contained a pair of oars, a sprit-sail and mast, a coiled seine, and, in the stern, a small breaker of fresh water. Without hesitation he stepped aboard, and, adjusting the thwarts and oars and arranging the sail so that it would act as a cover for him, he lay down and in two minutes was sound asleep.

Henry Bradford was a sound sleeper, a very sound sleeper, else this stroy might never have been written. He knew naught of the stealthy rise of the tide nor of the lift of the dory as she became water borne, nor did he know that in his earlier arrangements he had loosened the noosed painter from the bowlder over which it had been slippedf. He did not feel the impact of the gentle southwest wind which wafted the dory slowly but surely to the point of the beach.

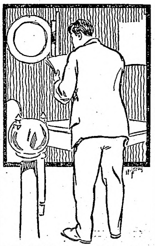
The outgoing tide in Plymouth harbor is much like a mill-race as it hurries to the greater waters of Barnstable bay.

Henry Bradford awoke, with chattering teeth and staring eyes, to find his boat being lifted again by the mighty hand of his dream. His rudely aroused senses apprised him of the situation. He knew himself to be in the dory, and he also realized that the dory was afloat and contending with a phase of ocean disturbance with which he was not familiar. The next uplift was of much less volume than its predecessor, and after three or four minor fluctuations he felt that his boat was rising and falling to the normal Atlantic swell. The air was heavy, damp and clammy, and was filled with many odors difficult of description, but all of the briny sea. He cautiously raised himself to a standing position and surveyed the horizon. The arc of sea and sky before him was utterly blank. As he slowly swung his body to complete his view of the horizon, he saw on his starboard quarter, and well astern of him, the well-known gleam of Race point light. At the same moment there burst on his ear a thunderous, reverberating roar, such a sound as might be caused by a mighty wind devastating a great forest, or by the discharge of a thousand field pieces in a mighty cavern.

Tense and strained, Henry sensed everything which came to ear, eye or nostril. He realized that there had been a mighty upheaval of the ocean. That thunderous sound was undoubtedly the impact of a tidal wave upon a distant shore, that strange, clammy smell, the tang of which was still in his nostrils, was no doubt caused by the depths of ocean being hurled to the surface by this marine cataclysm.

It was very dark, the clouds obscured the sky and a light wind came from the northeast. Henry had now got his bearings. His dory had shipped but little water during the awful tumult. He was in the act of stepping the mast, when a new sound broke upon his ear. It was the slatting of a vessel's sails, and in his immediate proximity. His strained eyes discerned a blotch upon the blackness of the night, slightly on his port bow and becoming momentarily plainer to his vision. A moment later he was able to make out a schooner, with all sail set, riding deeply in the water and nearly hove-to. Henry dropped the mast and shipped the oars, a few strokes of which brought him on her weather quarter, whence he lustily hailed: "Schooner, ahoy!" which, being repeated and varied with "Aboard the schooner," bringing him no reply, he again seized his oars and brought the dory alongside. He leaped lightly on board, painter in hand. He trailed his boat astern and secured the painter firmly. The schooner was on the starboard tack with all sail set, including fore and main gaff topsails, foretopmast staysail, jib and flying jib. About 20 feet of her midship bulwark was torn away and her decks were wet and slippery from recent inundations.

A hasty inspection of the cabin berths and its single stateroom disclosed no sign of life. An inspection of the deck forecastle produced similar results, and Henry Bradford realized that he was the only living being aboard that ill-fated schooner.



A Hurried Examination of the Papers.

His mind was now intensely alert and he was on familiar ground. As fast as halyards could be handled, he clewed up both gaff topsails, and hauled down and furled the flying jib, jib and foretopmast staysail. Then, after stoppering both gaff topsails, he returned to the deck and in a few minutes had the schooner upon the proper course for Boston light.

Daylight had come and the wind had freshened slightly. A hurried examination of the papers in the captain's stateroom disclosed the vessel's manifest, which gave the information that the schooner Clara Bates, 450 tons register, owned by Bates & Joyce of Boston, commanded by Capt. Ezra Perry of Salem, and a crew of five men, was carrying 530 tons of coal consigned to the owners of the vessel in Boston. A small sum of money in the captain's desk and the usual instruments of navigation were the things of most value which caught Bradford's eye during his hurried examination. The demands of the inner man were satisfied with a substantial breakfast, consisting of ham, fried potatoes and hot coffee.

The wind held true, and Bradford's mind had already worked out a plan of operations. He led his jib downhaul and jib halyards—secured by a slip noose—aft, and, once in smooth water, he made ready his sheet anchor, secured by a cat-stopper only, and overhauled a few fathoms of chain. At four o'clock that afternoon, he brought the Clara Bates into the wind on South Boston flats, hauled down his jib and, as the vessel lost way, slipped his cat-stopper and anchored!

The rest is mere detail. It was in the fall of the great coal strike, and coal was coal. Henry sent word to Bates & Joyce by the harbor master's tug, and an hour later the corpulent and genial Mr. Joyce was on board and had heard Henry's wonderful story. At 11 o'clock the next day Henry Bradford signed a release and accepted a lump sum of $5,000 in lieu of all services rendered and salvage expected. There is one more happy detail. The 20 feet of bulwark that was torn away from the side of the Clara Bates acted as a life raft for the members of her company, who were swept overboard at the same time. They were picked up a few hours later by an ocean-going tug with a tow of coal barges and bound for Salem.

At the earnest request of Henry Bradford, his name was suppressed from the newspaper accounts of the salving of the Clara Bates, and his appearance among his townspeople a few days later was received as the home-coming of a man who had gone out, done battle with the great world and returned successful.

Neck Adornment

SHEER blouses and sheath gowns have been jokingly called "back to nature" garments, but perhaps there is some truth in the name. Surely there is a trend toward unadorned simplicity. We have the tight-fitting gown, the one piece dress, the sandal fad, the old-fashioned sun hat and now the comfortable, cool and artistic Byron collar.

The "Gibson" collar, with its artificial height, is still with us. It is plainly fitted, and the bones under the ears serve to preserve the unbroken line of the neck and shoulder. One of the beauties of low neck is that it reveals the curve from the ear to the top of the shoulder, and when a high collar is properly fitted and properly boned the curve is easily discovered. The ruche around the top merely serves to soften the line of the face. It does not in any way break the beautiful line, though it would were the collar a little lower.

The collars of handkerchief linen and bits of precious lace are also used only for informal occasions; with them it is allowable to wear a little bow made of lace or fine linen.

Handkerchiefs make charming collars and bows of this type, particularly when combined with baby Irish or real valenciennes edging.

Hand embroidery, too, turns a plain linen collar into a thing of beauty, and many of the prettiest are decorated with English eyelet work. With these one may wear a little linen bow, also embroidered in eyelet.

One beauty of the low collar is that it is the most becoming style of neckwear for the younger girl, the maiden who is just at the awkward age. For her the high collar is inappropriate, and the band at the top of the dress is not a very attractive finish. She may, therefore, appropriately wear a broad low collar, whether it be of plain linen or embroidery.

What a charming school dress may be made of blue serge—waist and skirt quite plain, the neck finished only with a plain stiff linen Eton collar and black four-in-hand tie! It is girlish, attractive and serviceable.

It seems odd that in one season there should be such a difference of style—only the very high and the very low collars are really the fashion. The half-way, medium-height collar has no place at all in the present scheme of things. But, after all, the high collar suits the woman with the long neck, the low one suits her with the short neck, while the average woman may wear either that appeals to her fancy. As usual, Dame Fashion seems to have a reason.

BODICE FOR VOILE DRESS.

Here is a pretty bodice suitable to be copied in voile or any thin material; it is made on a tight-fitting lining of sateen, which is fastened at the back, the trimming of filet guipure of the color of the material is bound each side with silk; a strip of finely-tucked silk is carried from the waist back and front over the shoulders. The puffed sleeves are gathered into a band of silk-bound guipure.

Materials required: 2 yards 46 inches wide, 1 yard silk, 3½ yards trimming, 1½ yards sateen.

The Lamp Shade Hat.

A new hat which has just arrived from Paris is called the lamp shade. It is immense. It has a huge brim that slopes down over the head at almost the angle of a lamp shade.

The other new hat to make its appearance is called the Botticelli. It is not necessary to explain where this got its name. The only question is, will it be a success?

Fancy Broadcloths.

Chiffon broadcloth appears in all the new colorings and of a lightness and softness even surpassing that achieved by the manufacturers last year. Fancy broadcloths in one-tone colorings and woven satin or chevron stripes are numerous.—American Register, London.

SERGE FOR SCHOOL FROCKS.

Is Rapidly Superseding All Other Materials in Popularity.

It looks as though serges would take the place of almost all other materials for those dressy little frocks that children wear to school. The patterns are good, too, being in jumper styles, with outlines made with piping, and the underwaist of a soft material in like color with the sleeves trimmed with anchors or pretty emblems suitable for such purposes. One dark blue serge dress was made plain with a plaited skirt, each plait about two inches wide at the waist line, gradually broadening at the hem. The jumper waist was also plaited in similar style and made with wide armholes, outlined with a narrow band of woolen braid in a brick-red tone. The V-shaped yoke was fashioned in the same manner. However, the yoke had a heading about 2½ inches wide, cut the shape of the yoke and outlined on each side with braid; the dress fastened with small brick-red buttons.

Hand Embroidery on Blouse.

Hand embroidery is not positively necessary as a means of introducing color in a blouse, although a little hand-work of this sort is very desirable. Very fine and dainty embroideries of batiste, with embroidered vines or dot patterns in color, are to be had, and can be introduced as trimming in combination with a little valenciennes or cluny lace in a blouse of sheer white fabric. White mull frills, scalloped in color, are also good in the finer machine-made embroideries.

Plaited Tulle.

For mid-season wear, and later on for theater and restaurant wear, is the huge toque of plaited tulle.

Large as it is, it is only half as large as the great sailor hat. It has a mob crown, which is rather low, as mob crowns go, and has a tiny brim laid in small box-plaits, the crown wrapped about with black or colored satin.

For other trimming there is added a single black gauze rose, with a center of gilt beads or rhinestones.

Handkerchief Picture Frame.

A neat little frame for a picture is made with a handkerchief. It is first stiffly laundered. All points are directed toward the center and ironed. The four points are then turned back, just reaching the edge. They are pressed and held in place with baby-ribbon rosettes. This leaves a small square for the picture. Hang it diamond shape on the wall.

ROAD AND FARM IMPROVEMENT

WAGON TIRE DRAG.

Loop Together Four Old Iron Hoops and Let Them Break Up the Clods.

The writer while driving over the northern portion of Arkansas observed the drag shown in the illustration at work. The tool was so much different from anything we had ever seen that we at once stopped and walked one round with the driver, simply to watch the drag grind up the clods. While the cut is self explaining, and it is easily seen that the drag is made with four old wagon tire irons, the driver informed us that the two front tires should be heavier than the two rear tires, and that sometimes he wired a log on the front tires, when the ground was very lumpy. The four tires were fastened together with short chains, and the evener fastened with chains to the two front tires, as shown. We were later shown one of these drags, fastened with open rings, which appeared to be preferable to the chains, continues the writer in Wallace's Farmer. The tires simply ground the clods and lumps into a fine powder and left the surface of the field in better shape than any we have ever seen. The drag is inexpensive and may possibly be of some help to those who intend to sow wheat or late cowpeas, etc.

FARM SURVEYS.

How a Straight-Edge Board and Spirit Level Can Be Used.

A means of surveying for the farmer without investment in any expensive equipment has been offered by a correspondent. This can be readily practiced by any one, and requires only a board with a straight edge and a spirit level. The way to go about it is this: First determine the only two points, the levels of which you desire to determine, and drive stakes in the ground. Then take a board with an even edge and tack it to a tree, if one happens to be available within the line of the two stakes. Otherwise drive a third stake in the ground between them. Put the board at such a height that you can readily sight over it, and carefully level this board by means of the spirit level. Then sight over it toward one of the stakes, having some one at that stake who will by means of a small piece of paper locate the point at which your line of vision cuts it—in other words, where a line projected from your sighting board would strike the stake. Make some sort of a mark at this point, and then sight to the other stake in the same way, and mark the point where the line would strike it. By measuring distances that these two points are above the ground you can get the difference in levels with reasonable accuracy, says the Journal of Agriculture. For instance, if your line of vision has cut one stake eight feet from the ground, and the other one five feet from the ground, then obviously the difference in level is three feet, or, in other words, the vicinity of the stake on which the mark is five feet from the ground is three feet higher than the other stake, and you will have a three foot fall from draining from this point to the other.

RAISING ONION SETS.

A Suggestion to Women Folks for Making a Little Pin Money.

An easy way for a woman to make a little money for herself is by raising onion sets from seed. To get the best results the seed should be planted late, using ground where an early crop, such as peas or string beans, has grown. The seedbed should be made firm and solid, and the seed planted thickly in wide rows, lightly covered and pressed down with a board.

All weeds should be kept out, says the Farm and Home, but no thinning is done, as the object is to crowd them so that the onions will not grow too large for sets. If the earth seems to cover the bulbs entirely it should be swept away from them with a broom.

When sufficient growth has been made it is usually late enough in the season so that the tops die down naturally, but if they do not they should be broken down by running a roller over them. Soon after this they should be dug and dried carefully, outdoors if possible, then stored in a cool, dry place till spring. All grocers handle them and it is not difficult to find a market for all one has to sell

After suffering for seven years, this woman was restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Read her letter.

Mrs. Sallie French, of Paucaunla, Ind. Ter., writes to Mrs. Pinkham:

"I had female troubles for seven years—was all run-down, and so nervous I could not do anything. The doctors treated me for different troubles but did me no good. While in this condition I wrote to Mrs. Pinkham for advice and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I am now strong and well."

FACTS FOR SICK WOMEN.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has positively cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration. Why don't you try it?

Don't hesitate to write to Mrs. Pinkham if there is anything about your sickness you do not understand. She will treat your letter in confidence and advise you free. No woman ever regretted writing her, and because of her vast experience she has helped thousands. Address, Lynn, Mass.

ALL HIS OWN.

"My! What a big figure you are getting!"

"Well, what does that matter? I haven't taken yours, have I?"

RHEUMATISM PRESCRIPTION

The increased use of whiskey for rheumatism is causing considerable discussion among the medical fraternity. It is an almost infallible cure when mixed with certain other ingredients and taken properly. The following formula is effective: "To one-half pint of good whiskey add one ounce of Toris Compound and one ounce of Syrup Sarsaparilla Compound. Take in tablespoonful doses before each meal and before retiring."

Toris compound is a product of the laboratories of the Globe Pharmaceutical Co., Chicago, but it as well as the other ingredients can be had from any good druggist.

Even to China Land.

The equal-rights wave has reached the shores of China, and it is reported that a number of wives in Canton have left their husbands, saying that they will no longer be subject to them. The wives have had the worst of it, however, as the law gives power to imprison them, and they have had to suffer the consequences of their rash resolves.

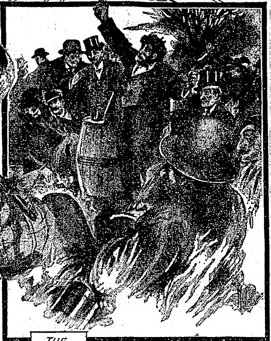
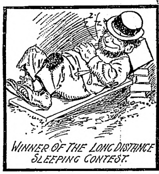
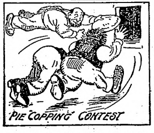
THE PERMANENT CHAIRMAN



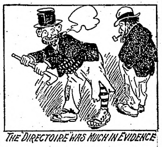
THE CONVENTION IN SESSION



WINNER OF THE LONG DISTANCE SLEEPING CONTEST.



"PIE COPPING" CONTEST



THE DIRECTOIRE WAS MUCH IN EVIDENCE

"AN' DE shack wanted yez tuh heave clinkers, he did, huh? Well, I s'pose yez tole where t'ell he got off, didn't yez?"

"Naw, not fer dese weary meat hooks. I piles me carcus off de blind' at dis hole in de woods an', wedder permittin', me and de boes from de Ollie Magoo belt'll roost here 'til de snow flickers." "Soy, how's de brakies down dat way? De last time me an' de Honyak wuz dere, de connie elevated us from the inside of a empty inter a cactus garden, four hundred and eighty-wan miles from grub. We walks de ties fer tree weeks. Den we hits Alberquerque an' I near had tuh beat a carpet tuh git grub. De ole gurrul would uv had me woikin' only she grubs me foist, befoar she brings out de woik tools. Den I digs."

That animated, brilliant and engrossing repertoire was only one of several thousand of the same variety, which comprised hobo reminiscences told by members of the great army of the unwashed which assembled in convention not many months ago at Clifford, Ill., for the National Hobo reunion.

Small tramps, fat tramps, tall tramps, short tramps, red-headed ones, blondes, colored tramps, low-down tramps, tramps with high personal regard for their vocations, and others who were sneaky and might be caught working, were it not for the watchfulness of their brothers, all assembled in solemn conclave to worship their goddess, Rest.

These sons of rest—but they were not all sons, there were several daughters of rest—all paid their respects to the cause for which they are fighting in their own tactless way. They, for the nineteenth time, swore loyalty to the association's motto: "Work, washing and worry are weapons of the devil and he who would knowingly or intentionally invite the descent of his platonic majesty in that manner, he it is who is no true Son of Rest."

Slothful Sam, President Weary Willie, Ragged Rufus, Tattered Tom, Reeking Reignald, Dinky Dan, the best dressed "bo" in the association; Handout Hank, Pieface Peter, Loping Louie, Walking Walter, Frayed Francis, Mirthful Mike, Tin-Can Teddy, and all the rest of the influential brethren of the Fraternal Order of the Unwashed, were there.

The attendance was as large as usual. There were some missing, of course. Roll call revealed the fact that Secretary Sighing Sinkers was unavoidably detained by friends among the authorities at the Desplaines street police station in Chicago. He was booked as a "vag," much to the unwashed chagrin of President Weary Willie, who in the course of his opening address remarked that it was "De woist coise dat wuz ever put fort' on dis susietie, tuh t'ink dat one uv de most necessary poissons of de order should be cumpelled tuh miss dis intellergen' meetin'."

All the old officers of the association were reelected, the minutes of the meeting being inscribed upon the brain of President Weary Willie until Secretary Sinkers should be released from his sojourn in Chicago. The members of the association, the most easily satisfied crowd on earth, then adjourned This action consisted of the chief executive dropping into a sound sleep. Others did the same.

The following day the annual games of the organization were given. There were several innovations, hitherto not introduced. The long distance snoozing contest drew out several hundred entries and it required three days before the judges were able to render a decision. Wakeful Waffles was returned victor eventually, but up to the time of writing he was still snoozing noisily, utterly ignorant of the honor which his happy faculty had thrust upon him.

The handsomest hobo contest was captured by Dinky Dan, who in a little address to the slumbering contestants in the long-distance sleeping contest, declared that in the absence of any prize, the honor alone gave him plenty of satisfaction.

It was decidedly appropriate that Handout Hank should corral the laurels in the handout roping contest. The pies, which proved the articles of war and also the prizes, were placed on a ledge on the outside of a house loaned for the purpose.

Hank, instead of struggling with his fellows on the outside, stole a pitchfork, went inside the house and speared the pies, one by one, from the second story window. Then to rub in the defeat inflicted upon the rest of the convention, he sat on the sill of the open window and slowly munched the pastry delicacies, to the discomfiture of several hundred upturned hungry faces.

Several weeks before the session was called to order Slothful Sam appeared as an advance guard of the army of the unwashed and prepared a set of rules, which were turned over to the meeting, but were turned down by unanimous vote, the members fearing they might inflict punishment upon themselves by voting for the proposed regulations.

Following were Sam's proposals:

That one month's growth of beard be made the maximum.

That special refrigerator cars be provided for tanks.

That questionable touring anecdotes be punished according to the veracity of the tales.

That any member guilty of work be made to toil and wash daily.

That hoboes found guilty of aiding in perpetuating the ancient tin can joke be shunned by their fellows.

That members apprehended with soap upon their persons be given capital punishment.

That rewards of merit be devised for those who promised to work, secured a meal upon that basis, and then deserted.

That a system of chalk signals be arranged to designate homes where the lady of the house is generous.

That the war on savage dogs be carried on with the extermination of all canines in view.

That brakemen be made honorary members of the order.

That those brakemen who have distinguished themselves in the aid of members be awarded rewards of merit.

That thorough tests, mental and physical, be provided for taking in new members.

That beer be made the official drink of the order.

That water be shunned with customary regularity.

President Weary Willie pointed that these rules showed the deep thought of Slothful Sam. The president ruled that a man guilty of thinking should be watched, for he might work. So fearful lest there should be a joker concealed somewhere within the resolutions, the convention turned them down flat.

"Even wid dese t'ings aside," soliloquized Weary, "it needs woik ter keep dem resolushuns on de members' min's an' woik is de most hated uv de order's enemies."

So that ended Slothful Sam's great coup. He said he thought he had a great idea, but he had not figured that in nursing his plans he had infringed upon one of the most sacred traditions of his brothers.

Before members were allowed to enter the field in which the convention was held, a thorough inspection was made of the man's credentials. Bona fide proof of membership was necessary. Traces of prosperity about the hobo's person relegated him to the position of a rank outsider. Special arrangements were made with railroad companies for the transportation of such undesirables.

The meetings, as a rule, were held in Riverview park, Clifford, but occasionally committees met wherever there was standing room. A grand parade of hoboes took place on the third day of the convention and it was watched by hundreds of townspeople. The hobo association of a near-by district gave an excursion, and a feast, after which the members disbanded to their regular territories, most of them going into winter quarters.

The reader will wonder where the wayfarers slept while they were engaged in carrying out their convention plans. Others wondered, too, but one early-rising farmer near Clifford determined for himself when he fouund the committee upon the extermination of water snoring in the key of A in a manger early one morning. Others took to reclining benches in the parks, some utilized fence corners, while the more listless of the order satisfied themselves with such luxuries of sleep as were furnished underneath front porches.

All in all, it must be said that the convention was a great success, more enthusiasm attending the meeting than ever before. There was more grub, less allusion to soap and water and lots of sleep for the tourists.

THE WARPED SENSE OF HUMOR.

It is a big thing to be born with a sense of humor. It will force smooth sailing on life's roughest seas, and will make even drudgery bearable.

The woman who cannot see a joke, even at her own expense, is to be pitied—and so are her fun-loving friends. There is nothing harder on both sides than a humorism that falls flat.

The good people who are interested in the decrease of divorce should have a law passed that the serious minded and the joker may not wed. It means ructions ere the orange blossoms fade.

A man not long ago was bewailing a broken engagement. A friend who knew them both said:

"It is the Lord taking a hand to save you from a lifetime of misery. Georgia couldn't see fun if it were labeled JOKE, and you couldn't help joking though it meant a separation from those you loved best."

But it is one thing to have a sense of humor and another to have a warped sense of humor. There is no one more maddening than the person who roars at our mishaps and thinks it "so funny" to mortify his friends.

You can afford to laugh—if you feel like it—when you fall in a crowded ballroom or lose your false puffs in church; but you have no friendship so tender that will warrant a smile when a friend does the same..

It is the woman with the misplaced sense of humor who tells embarrassing anecdotes about family makeshifts, or who repeats as a good joke to a common friend something you have said about her but never intended her to hear.

One of these misplaced humorists is the husband who thinks it funny to ask a guest to have certain dishes, and when she accepts to tell her "We are just out of it."

Have you never been covered with embarrassment by having such a man ask you to say grace at his dinner table and shriek with laughter at your efforts to get out of it?

Then there are humorists who, when you tell a good story, think it "smart" to receive it with forced guffaws, and others who willfully refuse to laugh at the point.

Laugh all you can, but have a sense of fitness in your laughing. To joke over the bumps in your own life will do much to smooth them; to find humor in the mishaps of your friends is soon to find yourself friendless.

No matter how keen your sense of humor, use discretion in sharing a joke with a friend. Humor is like lightning. It rarely strikes twice in the same way.

The Elder Robert Fulton.

Robert Fulton was born at Little Britain, Lancaster county, Pa., Nov 14, 1765. His biographers have called him "a self made man" and have made but brief reference to his parentage. It is noteworthy that his father, the senior Robert Fulton, in a failure to leave financial patrimony to his children has not been accorded the mention of other achievements, not slight in these primitive days. His ancestors crossed from Scotland to Ireland prior to the time of Cromwell. From Kilkenny, Ireland, the Fulton family came to America before the year 1735. The senior Robert Fulton was among the prominent men of Lancaster, his name having been on record upon all the town organizations which existed at that period. He was a founder of the Presbyterian church, the secretary of the Union Fire company and a charter member of the Juliana library of Lancaster, the third library established in the American colonies.—Century.

To the Voters of ## Red Lake County.

As it will be impossible for me to meet you all personally before Election, I wish in this way to solicit your vote and support for "Jeffers" for Register of Deeds, on Nov. 3rd. If elected I will give to the duties of the office my personal attention and my time, experience and best ability will at all times be at the disposal of the patrons thereof.

"A friend in need is a friend indeed", and I need you.

Yours truly,
FRANK JEFFERS.

To The Votes of ## Red Lake County.

I am a nominee for the office of County Superintendent of Schools, and hereby ask for your votes and kind influence. I have lived in this county for 26 years and its future is my future. By working early and late on the farm, I saved enough to pay my way thru college, and I now hold the Bachelor of Arts Degree and a Professional First Grade Certificate. I have had ten years experience in school work, and feel capable of caring for the office in a reliable and efficient manner. If elected it will be a pleasure for me to take charge of the schools of the county and my utmost effort will be devoted to their improvement and progress.

O. A. NAPLIN.

Announcement.

I hereby announce my candidacy for the Democratic nomination for the office of Sheriff of Red Lake county. If nominated and elected I will pledge myself to conduct the duties of the office in an absolutely fair and impartial manner according to law, and the best of my ability. I respectfully solicit your vote and support in my candidacy.

Yours very truly,
J. W. McGINTY.

NOTICE OF TAX SALE

Of Unredeemed Lands in Red Lake County, Minnesota, Under Sections 936, 937 and 938, Revised Laws of 1905, as Amended by Chapter 430, General laws of 1907.

Pursuant to the provisions of Sections 936, 937 and 938 of the Revised Laws of 1905, as amended by Chapter 430 General laws of 1907, notice is hereby given that on Monday the [illegible] day of November, 1908, at 10 o.clock in the forenoon, at the office of the County Auditor in the county Court House at Red Lake Falls in Red Lake County, Minnesota, all tracts or parcels of land, situate in Red Lake County, bid in for the State, and not assigned to purchasers or redeemed within three years from the date of the tax sale at which said parcel were offered and so bid in by the State, will be offered at public sale, and will be sold to the highest bidder therefor. No parcel will be sold for a less sum than the aggregate taxes, penalties, interests and costs charged against it, unless the cash value thereof fairly determined by the State Auditor, shall be less than such aggregate, provided, however that all parcels bid in for the state, for the taxes of 1901, or prior years, and not assigned to purchasers, or redeemed as aforesaid, may be disposed of for one half of the total taxes as originally assessed. Purchasers shall forthwith pay the amount of their respective bids to the County Treasurer. Said sale will begin at the time and place named above and will continue from day to day until every such tract or parcel shall have been offered for sale, under the provisions of said statutes. The list of said real property, subject to said sale, and which will be so offered for sale, unless previously redeemed, is now on file in the office of said County Auditor, and of the State Auditor of said State.

Owners, or interested parties may redeem their property by paying the full amount due to the county Treasurer, at any time before sale, and within sixty (60) days after proof of service of the Notice of Expiration of Redemption has been filed with the County Auditor.

After the Notice of Expiration of Redemption has been served, as provided in Section 938, Revised Laws 1905, the Governor is authorized to issue a deed in the name of the State to the person entitled thereto. (See Section 938 R. L.)

Marlin

For shooting the swift flying, heavily feathered ducks and geese the Marlin 12-gauge repeating shotgun has no superior. This gun is exceedingly strong in construction and yet is not heavy. It is bored to throw an excellent pattern with great penetration. The solid top keeps out the weather and the brush and twigs of the blind, and the side ejector prevents the empty shells from being a nuisance to the shooter. It's the best bad weather gun.

The Marlin 12-gauge is suited to all forms of bird and trap shooting, and for durability, strength and ease of action is unexcelled. Made for both black and smokeless powders and for heavy loads. Two separate extractors make sure work.

Lost Home By Fire.

Herman M. Lillo had the misfortune a few days ago to lose his dwelling house in Deer Park township and all its contents by fire. Mr. Lillo had been in Dakota for several weeks and Mrs. Lillo was stopping with her mother. Mr. Lillo had returned and they were making preparations to start housekeeping again when the fire occured. The blaze started late in the evening and the cause of it is a mystery. The loss will amount to several hundred dollars and we understand there was no insurance.

For Superintendent Of Schools.

To the Voters of Red Lake County:

I havo received the Republican nomination for the office of Superintendent of Schools and hereby wish to express my sincere thanks for the generous vote at the primaries. As it is impossible for me to meet you all before election, and you wish to know something of my qualifications, I will say that I obtained an education at one of our State Normal Schools and also hold a State First Grade certificate. My work in the public schools covers a period of thirteen years, so I have become acquainted with all our educational system.

If I am elected, I shall devote all my time to the duties of the office.

Very sincerely yours,
HERMAN F. ANDERSON.

To The Voters.

I have received the Republican nomination for the office of Register of Deeds. I am a candidate for relection. I ask a second term on the merits of my work in the office only. I invite all the voters to look over the work and see wehther or not it is satisfactory.

If you find that you can conscienciously snpport me at the coming election I will greatly appreciate your vote and any good word that you may say in my behalf.

Very truly yours,
E. L. QUIST.

Raise Farmers' Taxes.

The State Board of Equalization has raised the assessed valuation of nearly all kinds of personal propety in Red Lake county and lowered real estate valuation. Cattle of all ages were increased 20 to 66⅔ per cent. Sheep are increased 50 per cent. Hogs are increase 33⅓ per cent. Wagons sleighs, etc, are increased 50 per cent. Household goods and wearing apparel are increased 60 per cent. Farm tools and machinery are increased 25 per cent. Real estate was reduced 15 per cent.

This Board of Equalization, appointed by a democratic governor, and alleged to be one of his best efforts, thus helps the actual settlers who are working their land and developing the country, to pay more of the taxes, and helps the real estate speculetors, who hold their land in idleness and do nothing to develope the country, to avoid the payment of heavy taxes. This is a beautiful exexample of what the farmers may expect to happen again if the same democratic governor is elected again.

An Odd Legacy.

Thomas Jefferson, the founder of the Jefferson family of actors, was remembered curiously in the will of Weston, who was himself an esteemed member of Garrick's company. Weston's will contained this item:

"I have played under the management of Mr. Jefferson at Richmond and received from him every politeness. I therefore leave him all my stock of prudence, it being the only good quality I think he stands in need of."

Publicity.

"'Twas in the newspaper, and all the world now knows it," is the motto of a leading advertising agency.

S. A. Swanson, Republican candidate for Judge of Probate, has been a resident of what is now Red Lake County for 27 years, coming here with his parents from New Jersey on April 12, 1881, and settling in Black River township. In 1892 he began teaching and divided his time between that vocation and work on the homestead until Dec. 26, 1896, when he was appointed the first Register of Deeds of Red Lake county in which capacity he served two years.

Since that he has asked for no county office, but he has twice been a candidate for the legislature: in 1900 carrying the county by over 300 for Representative, and a second time in 1902, receiving a majority of 844 for State Senator, both times being defeated by the heavy opposition vote from the other counties in this district.

His fidelity to friends and fairness in all business transactions has gained him cordial support where he is known. As a candidate for Judge of Prrbate before the voters of Red Lake county, he asks a fair consideration from every voter in the county.

BULGARIAN SITUATION.

The latest phase of the Balkan difficulty points to the possibility of the most serious issues being settled by direct negotiation before the proposed international congress meets, leaving to the congress the work merely of ratifying and legalizing the arrangements already made.

Quick work by French diplomats induced Turkey and Bulgaria to suspend their mobilization orders and averted war for the time at least.

The Bulgarian cabinet decided to reject the proposal emanating from London for the payment of indemnity to Turkey as a condition of recognizing Bulgaria's independence.

Turkey fears Bulgaria's military activity will yet bring on war and declines to be responsible for the result. Great Britain, France and Russia agreed on a program to be submitted to the other powers as a basis for the proposed conference.

KERN QUITS TOUR; SON SERIOUSLY ILL

DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE FOR VICE-PRESIDENCY RETURNS TO HIS HOME.

BRYAN INVADES REALM OF TAFT

Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 22.—John W. Kern, the Democratic vice-presidential nominee, Wednesday abandoned his campaign in this vicinity and left for home at 5 p. m. on the Southwestern Limited in response to a message from his wife telling of the serious illness of their three-year-old son. Mr. Kern had arranged to go to Oswego Wednesday afternoon and then to Ashtabula, O., and Conneaut, O., intending to speak at the latter place Thursday night, but when he was informed that the illness of his son had suddenly taken a turn for the worse he decided to start at once.

Son Is Seriously Ill.

Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 22.—John W. Kern, Jr., the eight year-old son of John W. Kern, Democratic candidate for the vice-presidency, is seriously ill in this city and Mrs. Kern telegraphed her husband to return to Indianapolis at once. The boy is suffering with infantile paralysis.

Bryan in Ohio.

Newark, O., Oct. 22.—"I say to you that the little ward heeler who goes around and bribes a man for five dollars is a moral character beside the man who attempts to use his power to threaten those who work for him and to buy them by a promise of increase or threaten them by a promise of decrease." Thoroughly aroused by what he termed a "menace" through the publication Wednesday of a press dispatch stating that the officials of the New York Central lines had summoned their workmen and informed them that if the Democrats won the election there would be a ten per cent. reduction in wages, but that if they lost there would be an increase, William J. Bryan in a before-breakfast speech to a vast throng poured a volley of criticism into the Republican party for its campaign tactics. The second invasion of the native state of his Republican opponent was begun by Mr. Bryan at this place, he having come direct from Louisville during the night. Mr. Bryan spoke at Mount Vernon, Mansfield, Ashland, Creston, Akron, Ravenna, Warren, Niles, Youngstown, East Liverpool, Bellaire, Wellsville, Steubenville, Marietta, O., concluding at 9:45 Wednesday night with a stop at Williamstown, W. Va.

Taft Again in Indiana.

Cincinnati Oct. 22.—A day of absolute quiet and rest was indulged in by W. H. Taft, who arrived here Wednesday morning. Mr. Taft went at once to the residence of his brother, C. P. Taft, saying that he should see as few people as possible during the day that his voice might be improved as much as possible.

The three days' work in Indiana began Thursday and ends Saturday night, when the Taft special starts at once for New York city. Although it was decided, and so announced by Chairman Hitchcock, that the candidate would not go into Connecticut, the plan is understood to have been changed to the extent of having Mr. Taft make one speech in the Nutmeg state Monday. Just where the effort is to be made has not yet been decided.

The accumulation of mail, which it was necessary for Judge Taft to attend to Wednesday, was taken care of at the Taft residence, it being the intention of the candidate not to visit his offices in the Sinton hotel.

Lad Drowned at Easton, Pa.

Easton, Pa., Oct. 22.—While James Brixius and Walter Cramer, about eight years of age, were canoeing at the mouth of the Lehigh river Tuesday afternoon their craft was upset. The Brixius boy was drowned, but the other lad was rescued by Prof. W. T. Lyle of Lafayette college.

Alleged Murderer Held for Trial.

Medina, O., Oct. 22.—Guy Rasor, held for the murder of Orie Lee, his sweetheart, on the road near Wadsworth, on the night of October 8, was bound over to the grand jury on a charge of first degree murder by Justice Van Deusen Tuesday.

Vermont Senators Picked.

Montpelier, Vt., Oct. 22.—William P. Dillingham and Carroll S. Page were Wednesday formally elected to represent Vermont in the United States senate, at a joint session of the general assembly.

Three Burned to Death.

New York, Oct. 22.—Three persons were burned to death and the lives of 100 tenants of a six-story tenement on East Third street were imperiled in a fire that broke out in the building Wednesday.

Blast Kills Five in Panama.

New Orleans, Oct. 22.—News of the killing of five men in the Panama canal zone by a dynamite explosion was brought here Wednesday by passengers on the steamer Cartago from Colon.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Grand Stand Burns.

St. Paul.—The grand stand at Lexington Park was entirely destroyed by fire which started from an unknown origin early in the evening. An alarm was turned in at 8:15 o'clock, and before the engine companies arrived on the scene the entire stand was doomed and part of it had collapsed.

It was only by the fast work of the companies under the charge of Assistant Chief Rodecker that the bleachers on the first and third base side of the field were saved. The fire had evidently started in the middle of the stand, probably in the dressing rooms in the clubhouse, for the fire had eaten its way about an equal distance from that portion of the structure when the firemen arrived. Both bleachers had begun to burn, but two streams of water from the companies working from the hydrants on University avenue and from Lexington stopped these fires before any great amount of damage was done.

Beats the Farmers.

St. Cloud.—By using a pipette buyers for central creamery houses have been paying the farmers less for cream than they should.

The pipette is a measuring instrument in connection with testing the quality of milk. When used for cream it produces a result which shows that the cream is lower in butter fat than it really is. The price paid depends on the quality. These facts are shown in the bulletin of the state dairy and food department. In four towns buyers used the pipette in July, when the inspection was made, and in two of these towns, Holloway and Graceville, there is no local creamery to make the competition necessary to have the buyers give a fair price for the quality of An attempt was made in the last legislature to prohibit the use of the pipette for cream, but the bill was lost.

State Buys Pheasants.

St. Paul.—Sixty China pheasants are to be purchased by the state game and fish commission to be placed over the state for breeding purposes. They can be purchased for $1 each, which is cheaper than the state can raise them. The commission has been engaged for several years in the attempt to stock the state with these pheasants and they are protected by law for several years.

The commission also decided to buy additional land near the Deerwood hatchery if the engineers find it necessary. The land will amount to two and one-quarter acres, with flowage rights over an additional forty acres.

Blow Open Safe in Depot.

Taconite, Minn.—Yeggmen blew open the safe in the Messaba depot here about 1 o'clock in the morning, but were frightened away before they secured any of the money inside. Two suspects have been arrested at Holman and will be given a hearing.

The night watchman employed by the railroad company was eating his lunch in a nearby restaurant when he heard the explosion and ran toward the depot. He saw a man fleeing and took a shot at him without result. Examination showed that the door had been blown from the safe, but nothing inside had been tampered with.

After Pulp Wood.

International Falls.—Chairman Mann and the select congressional committee on pulp and paper have been in the woods tributary to this place for two days in consummation of their efforts to ascertain the available pulp wood supply of northern Minnesota. For seven hours the party under the guidance of Eric Franson of International Falls tramped in the rain through the timber to inspect tracts containing high land spruce and to search for a virgin forest where, as a congressman once unhappily described it, "the hand of man had never set foot."

County Division.

Crookston.—A large mass meeting to consider the proposed dividing of Polk county into two parts, the eastern end being made a new county, with Fosston as the county seat. The advocates of county division consider the outcome of the meeting—no action—as a decided victory for themselves. They think it will be easy to get the 300 Crookston votes necessary.

News Notes.

Duluth.—Possessed of a "plant" of jewelry and other articles of value amounting to about $500, fifteen-year-old Stanley Novak, has established a record for thievery. He was convicted in juvenile court and Judge Ensign sentenced him to the reform school.

Montevideo.—Neste Vandelos, a Hungarian section man, while attempting to board a switch engine in the yards here today, had his right foot smashed. He was taken to a hospital in Minneapolis.

Washington.—Glenn S. Gould has been appointed regular mail carrier on the rural free delivery out of Morrison, and William A. Gould has been selected as his substitute.

New Ulm.—The golden jubilee celebration of the Methodist churches of New Ulm and the town of Lafayette was celebrated in this city today.

EX-COTTON KING NOW A CLERK.

Dan Sully Now Employed on Salary of $10,000 a Year.

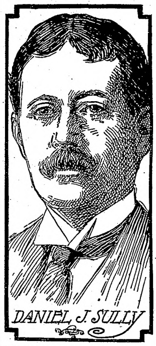
New York.—Daniel J. Sully, who, it seems only yesterday, was the Livermore of the cotton market, has gone to work on a salary. No longer the millionaire employer, the man who made hundreds of brokers jump and squirm as he squeezed or expanded cotton to his fancy, has descended from his high eminence to the post of factotum in the cotton concern of Hayden, Stone & Co.

The whilom "King" Sully is now a cotton expert at a salary estimated at about $10,000 a year. Only four years ago he often made that in a day. He would spend it on a horse, or a picture. But fate has swept away the floor of his riches and he must now toil a year for what was before a paltry dripping of his huge operations.



Mr. Sully's new office is a well equipped office as offices go, but woefully shabby and dull compared with the splendid, bustling suite he occupied in the days of his great prosperity.

In those years (1903-1904) Sully was not regarded as a conservative. In fact, he was heralded as the greatest plunger the cotton exchange had ever known. He bought and sold by the tens of thousands of bales. He dictated prices by squeezes and inflations, by tilting his holdings this way and that to suit the whim of his speculations.

But all that is changed. He has become an ultra conservative. As an example he must give no radical opinions. And he says that he is through with speculation forever.

"I will convince the people," he says, "that I am a conservative. I have attached myself to one of the most conservative houses in America."

Mr. Sully no longer lives in a mansion on Fifth avenue, but maintains a modest villa in Pelham Manor. He is no longer a member of any exchange.

His last big plunge, when he endeavored to become a "Soap King," lost him the remainder of his fortune —$250,000.

MERRY DEL VAL TO RETIRE.

Protests of American Cardinals Against Modernism Said to Be Cause.

Rome.—According to the Avanti Cardinal Merry del Val, the papal secretary of state, is about to retire. This step, it is asserted, is an outcome of representations made to the Vatican by American and English prelates, but particularly Cardinal Gibbons and Archbishop Ireland, who objected to the secretary's severe measures against modernism.

Cardinal Merry del Val.

According to the Avanti Cardinal Vannutelli received these complaints in London at the eucharistic congress and transmitted them to the pope.

Cardinal Merry del Val will probably be succeeded by Cardinal Rampolla, who formerly held this office. Rampolla's return to power would mean a policy of dignified conciliation with regard to France and an attitude of greater reserve toward Italy.

FACTS FOR SICK WOMEN

LYDIA E. PINKHAM

No other medicine has been so successful in relieving the suffering of women or received so many genuine testimonials as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

In every community you will find women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Almost every one you meet has either been benefited by it, or has friends who have.

In the Pinkham Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., any woman any day may see the files containing over one million one hundred thousand letters from women seeking health, and here are the letters in which they openly state over their own signatures that they were cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is made from roots and herbs, without drugs, and is wholesome and harmless.

The reason why Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is so successful is because it contains ingredients which act directly upon the feminine organism, restoring it to a healthy normal condition.

Women who are suffering from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not lose sight of these facts or doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health.

Ready, Whatever Happens.

"Work as though you were to live forever; live as though you were to die to-night," says an old writer. It is counsel that fits many, though the man whose life is well insured may claim some exemption. He has no need of working as though death were ready to come, for he has already anticipated and guarded his dependents against the monetary distress that so often trails in the grim visitor's wake. As for the rest of the advice, his policies are tangible evidence of his noble forethought and readiness to die, if need be, to-night.

Insanity.

"You admit having received a $50,000 fee from the trust?" said the lawyer for the state.

"I do," replied the senator, calmly. Besides, I sent it back."

"Sent it back!"

"I did."

"Your honor," said the lawyer, turning to the court, "I cannot prosecute an insane man."

Adjournment was had until some alienists could be rounded up.

The Trade Rat Mine

By Eustace V. Bray

(Copyright, by Shortstory Pub. Co.)

If the tourist or the tramp straying from the direct route between Marysville and Oroville chances to wander for awhile along a well-defined trail on the banks of a brawling branch of the Feather river, he is pretty sure to come upon a weather-beaten basin, and to be surprised by the singular object under a glass case that may be seen through its only window. Sometimes the curious traveler also gets a glimpse of the occupant of this lonely abode, a gaunt, bent old man, with hair and beard and shaggy brows of silvery whiteness.

But there is a kindly gleam in the honest blue eyes beneath those shaggy brows, undimmed even yet by the long years that have frosted the thin hair and patriarchal beard, and, attracted by the strange personality of the recluse and the romance of his surroundings, visitors have from time to time won his confidence sufficiently to draw from him the particulars that have become sublimated into the crystal of this strange story.

Horace Robb, though accustomed from boyhood to live and look out for himself, was by no means always a hermit, shunning his kind. He came to California in the early fifties—not a pioneer, but a follower in the track of the earliest searchers for gold. Youth, enthusiasm, restless energy, and a determination to win a fortune for her whom he had left behind were his incentives to untiring effort, but they did not bring success. The greater the endeavor, it seemed to him, the smaller the result. Now and again he found a color or two, just enough to keep him on the move.

Finally, tired, for the time, of roaming, he relocated an abandoned placer claim on this foaming branch of the Feather river, inheriting with it a deserted cabin and its meager plenishing of rude table, stool and bunk, and rusty pots and ans. He straightened up the rickety door, cleared out the spring, and installed his stock of bacon, beans and potatoes. Then he settled down to days of weary tramping with pick and pan and nights of deep, and dreamless sleep.

For the second day of his sojourn, Robb had found sticks, pebbles and other trash among his beans, and attributed the adulteration to a dishonest trader, but as the weeks went by the stock of beans diminished with alarming rapidity, while the refuse increased in proportion. Next the potato sack seemed filling up with rubbish, also, and the potatoes went faster than he ate them.

One day, returning suddenly to the cabin for a forgotten implement, he surprised a great rat in the act of dragging a candle into a hole which Robb had supposed to be securely stopped, and the cause of the disappearance of his supplies became apparent. But the steady increase of sticks and stones was still a puzzle to him until he recalled some of the queer tales told to him by miners of the trade rats that are said to be born with a sense of justice, and "cannot help trying to do the square thing."

Without stopping to theorize, he determined to put the matter to practical proof, and when he went to his next day's work he placed a tempting piece of bacon rind on the stump that served him as a sideboard, leaving the rat-hole still unstopped. When he came home at night the bacon was gone, and in its place was a stone. Day after day he repeated the experiment, until it became a habit with him to put a remnant of griddle-cake or a bit of bacon or potato skin upon this stump, and invariably he found at night a chip or twig or pebble in place of the vanished scrap of food. It was a sort of barter, in which the balance always showed on the wrong side of the ledger, but by keeping his provisions in a crude, tin-lined locker of his own construction, and allowing the rat-hole to remain open, he not only preserved his own rations from molestation, but inspired the trade rat with such a sense of dependence and immunity that the big rodent made a practice of coming out of his hole in the quiet hours of candle-light, for a supplementary evening luncheon. Sitting up on his haunches, he would wink his bright black eyes and wiggle his whiskers till the patient miner brought him a bit of food.

Things went on this way for months, and the trade rat, now almost tame, was Robb's only companion and distraction in many a lonely hour. All this time he was getting no gold to speak of, his supplies were nearly gone, and the prospects were decidedly discouraging.

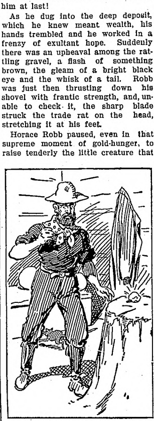
One morning—a clear, crisp California morning—Horace Robb put in the customary place on the stump a small fragment from his fast emptying larder and started out in search of his fortune just once more. He went to a different place, but there was no different result, and he returned to his cabin at the day's end as near to tears as a man of his make ever comes. Perfunctorily he prepared and ate his meal which he meant to be the last in that place, except a breakfast in the morning. Then as listlessly he lighted a candle. Its rays fell upon the stump where he had laid his last donation to the trade rat and sparkled upon a bright yellow nugget about the size of a lima bean. His breath left him and then came back in gasps. There before his eyes was gold—the object of every hour's toil and hope—gold, brought to him without a stroke of labor!

He sat back on his stool, lighted his pipe at the candle, and smoked and thought. There was nobody camped within miles and miles of him; no trace of a wayfarer upon the ground within the cabin or without. There could be no doubt that the nugget had been placed there by the trade rat, and he watched for his pet's usual evening appearance almost as eagerly as if assured that the animal would reply to his anxious questions. But the creature did not come, and he stretched himself in his bunk.

Early in the morning he was up, investigating the rat-hole, which extended deep into the ground beyond the cabin wall. There was a little fresh gravel around the mouth of the hole that convinced Robb of the source from which the gold had come, and he went outside and with nervous speed dug straight down into the burrow, which he widened and deepened as he worked. About three feet from the surface he came upon as promising a bed of gravel as a placer miner ever saw. Fortune had surrendered to him at last!

As he dug into the deep deposit, which he knew meant wealth, his hands trembled and he worked in a frenzy of exultant hope. Suddenly there was an upheaval among the rattling gravel, a flash of something brown, the gleam of a bright black eye and the whisk of a tail. Robb was just then thrusting down his shovel with frantic strength, and, unable to check it, the sharp blade struck the trade rat on the head, stretching it at his feet.

Horace Robb paused, even in that supreme moment of gold-hunger, to raise tenderly the little creature that had piloted him to wealth. He carried it to the creek and vainly endeavored to restore the life that had gone. When his day's work was suspended, he took time from his hours of slumber to carefully remove the skin from his departed comrade.



There Before His Eyes Was Gold.

In five days he had panned out 21 pounds of coarse nuggets, carrying the gravel down to the creek and washing it there, and the end of the treasure was not in sight. Still, it was only a pocket, of course, and the end came in time, but not until it had yielded enough to support a man of moderate desires all the days of his life.

Some men would have lingered at the scene of such a success, searching for another golden pocket, but only half of Horace Robb's ambition was achieved—the gold was but the means to an end. And so, as fast as his sturdy limbs could carry him, he hastened to the outer world.

When he reached Sacramento he found a delayed letter from her. Anxiously he skimmed the passages in which she dwelt upon her long period of patient waiting, and he turned white when he reached the announcement of her marriage with another. And this is why the discoverer of the "Trade Rat Mine" returned to that lonely cabin on a wild affluent of the Feather river, and why the great trade rat, under its dome of glass, is now, in the old man's frozen winter—as it was in his lusty springtime—his sole companion there.

First Aid to Farmers.

A farmer in Ohio wrote to the department of agriculture that he had struggled for 20 years on an 80-acre farm heavily mortgaged, but had been unable to reduce his debt or rise above poverty that made the bringing up of his family a humiliation. He asked if there was any hope for him upon the farm, or if he might as well give up the fight. The department requested that he make a detailed report of his farm and its soils, and upon this it based a plan of farming which he was recommended to follow to the letter. There was a profit the first year of $2,000, and the department believes that ultimately the despised 80 acres can be made to yield $5,000 a year.—World To-day.

THREE WEEKS.

Brought About a Remarkable Change.

Mrs. A. J. Davis of Murray, Ky., says: "When I began using Doan's Kidney Pills, kidney disease was slowly poisoning me. ### Husband and Wife.

No man yet was ever made more tender by having tenderness demanded of him; no man yet was ever cried into loving his wife more. I am willing to admit that men are as faulty creatures as women themselves, unsympathetic in small things, often blind, and that they may easily be exasperated into small brutalities of speech. If a woman refrains from exacting devotion, and is unswervingly kind and unselfish, a husband who has any affection for his wife at all can be left to look out for doing his share. He will look out for it anyway; no one else can make him. Neither tears nor entreaties will wring from him those small kindnesses and attentions so dear to women.—A Wife, in Harper's Bazar.

Congratulations Wanted.

On entering his club one evening not long ago a young Philadelphian was accosted by a friend, who exclaimed:

"Why, Charley, you are positively beaming! What's up?"

"I'm in the greatest luck imaginable," responded the other. "You know, I've been hanging about a pretty Yonkers girl for almost a year. During all this time she would never admit that she loved me; she would only say that she respected me. But now, old chap, congratulate me, for last night she confessed that she respected me no longer—that she loved me!"—Lippincott's.

Humorously Worded Rebuke.

Theodore P. Roberts had a fluent command of language, both in speaking and writing, and was well liked by everybody. He could secure the attention of a negligent publisher if need be. To one such, who was remiss about sending vouchers, he once closed up a long letter with the sentence: "And, finally, my dear sir, permit me to say that it would be easier for a camel to ride into the kingdom of heaven on a velocipede than for anyone to find a late copy of your paper in the city of New York."

A Discomfiting Witness.

The following colloquy took place between Councilor Sealingwax and a witness who "would talk back:" "You say, sir, the prisoner is a thief?" "Yes, sir. 'Cause why, she has confessed she was." "And you also swear she worked for you after this confession?" "Yes, sir." "Then we are to understand that you employ dishonest people to work for you, even after their rascalities are known?" "Of course. How else would I get assistance from a lawyer?"—Argonaut.

NOT A MIRACLE.

Just Plain Cause and Effect.

There are some quite remarkable things happening every day, which seem almost miraculous.

Some persons would not believe that a man could suffer from coffee drinking so severely as to cause spells of unconsciousness. And to find complete relief in changing from coffee to Postum is well worth recording.

"I used to be a great coffee drinker, so much so that it was killing me by inches. My heart became so weak I would fall and lie unconscious for an hour at a time. The spells caught me sometimes two or three times a day.

"My friends, and even the doctor, told me it was drinking coffee that caused the trouble. I would not believe it, and still drank coffee until I could not leave my room.

"Then my doctor, who drinks Postum himself, persuaded me to stop coffee and try Postum. After much hesitation I concluded to try it. That was eight months ago. Since then I have had but few of those spells, none for more than four months.

"I feel better, sleep better and am better every way. I now drink nothing but Postum and touch no coffee, and as I am seventy years of age all my friends think the improvement quite remarkable."

"There's a Reason."

CORNET BROUGHT ABOUT PEACE.

Spite Controversy Happily Ended Without Legal Warfare.

"Fellow was raising bees back in the foothill country," remarked Frank H. Short of Fresno. "Plenty of sagebrush; sage makes clear, delicious honey. Got in a row with a neighbor; shot his dog; said its barking annoyed his queen bees. Neighbor waited a whole year to get even, plowed up a big patch, planted wild mustard; grew fine. Bees thick on mustard flowers. Mustard makes bitter honey. Like to ruin the bee man's sales. Bee farmer came to me, wanted to sue for damages. 'What can I do?' he asked.

"'Nothing,' I said. 'He has a right to grow mustard on his own land.'

"'Well,' he said, 'I'll get some scheme to annoy him.'

"So he got a cornet; used to sit up from midnight till four o'clock in the morning practicing 'Wearing of the Green.' Fellow with the mustard was an Englishman; stood it for three weeks; went out with a scythe and cut down all the mustard. They've been good friends ever since."—San Francisco Chronicle.

CURE AT CITY MISSION.

Awful Case of Scabies—Body a Mass of Sores from Scratching—Her Tortures Yield to Cuticura.

"A young woman came to our city mission in a most awful condition physically. Our doctor examined her and told us that she had scabies (the itch), incipient paresis, rheumatism, etc., brought on from exposure. Her poor body was a mass of sores from scratching and she was not able to retain solid food. We worked hard over her for seven weeks but we could see little improvement. One day I bought a cake of Cuticura Soap and a bottle of Cuticura Resolvent, and we bathed our patient well and gave her a full dose of the Resolvent. She slept better that night and the next day I got a box of Cuticura Ointment. In five weeks this young woman was able to look for a position, and she is now strong and well. Laura Jane Bates, 85 Fifth Ave., New York, N. Y., Mar. 11, 1907."

Legend of Magpie and Robin.

The peasants of France, in accordance with a tradition, pierce the head of a magpie with a thorn whenever they catch one. According to the French legend, after Jesus had been nailed to the cross two birds alighted on the extended arms of the instrument of death. One was a magpie with a beautiful aigrette on its head and a long waving tail, then the handsomest of birds but the wickedest, chirping insult at the suffering Jesus. The other bird was a modest little bird with gray plumage, which approached the cross timidly, uttering cries of grief. With its beak it tried to pluck away one of the thorns. A single drop of the blood fell on the pitying little gray bird and gave the robin redbreast.

Willing to Help Him.

He had gone to the dry goods store with a bit of dress material which his wife had bidden him to match. "I am very sorry, sir," said the salesman, "but I have nothing exactly like this. The very last remnant was sold this morning."

"But I must have it!" exclaimed the husband. "Otherwise, how can I face my wife?"

"If you will permit me, sir," said the salesman, "I would venture to suggest that you invite a friend home to dinner with you."

MIX FOR RHEUMATISM

The following is a never failing remedy for rheumatism, and if followed up it will effect a complete cure of the very worst cases: "Mix one-half pint of good whiskey with one ounce of Toris Compound and add one ounce Syrup Sarsaparilla Compound. Take in tablespoonful doses before each meal and at bedtime." The ingredients can be procured at any drug store and easily mixed at home.

Game Youngster Preferred Drastic Action in Punishment.

"Youngsters are pretty philosophical," observed Wallace Knight, and then he went ahead to set forth the point of view of a small daughter at his house.

The child was sent to bed early the other evening as punishment for some act contrary to rules and regulations.

After she had been tucked in bed for some time and was supposedly asleep, the youngster called her father and told him she wished he would go ahead and spank her and have it over with, instead of sending her off to bed that way. "This lying in bed never's going to make me any better," she said, "and a good spanking would. Besides it makes me so mad I can't sleep and so what's the use of it?"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

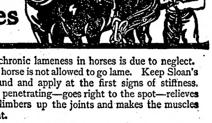
For Lameness in Horses



Much of the chronic lameness in horses is due to neglect. See that your horse is not allowed to go lame. Keep Sloan's Liniment on hand and apply at the first signs of stiffness. It's wonderfully penetrating—goes right to the spot—relieves the soreness—limbers up the joints and makes the muscles elastic and pliant.

Sloan's Liniment

will kill a spavin, curb or splint, reduce wind puffs and swollen joints, and is a sure and speedy remedy for fistula, sweeney, founder and thrush. Price, 50c. and $1.00

To the Voters of Red Lake County.

As it will be impossible for me to meet you all personally before Election, I wish in this way to solicit your vote and support for "Jeffers" for Register of Deeds, on Nov. 3rd. If elected I will give to the duties of the office my personal attention and my time, experience and best ability will at all times be at the disposal of the patrons thereof.

"A friend in need is a friend indeed", and I need you.

Yours truly,
FRANK JEFFERS.

To The Votes of Red Lake County.

I am a nominee for the office of County Superintendent of Schools, and hereby ask for your votes and kind influence. I have lived in this county for 26 years and its future is my future. By working early and late on the farm, I saved enough to pay my way thru college, and I now hold the Bachelor of Arts Degree and a Professional First Grade Certificate. I have had ten years experience in school work, and feel capable of caring for the office in a reliable and efficient manner. If elected it will be a pleasure for me to take charge of the schools of the county and my utmost effort will be devoted to their improvement and progress.

O. A. NAPLIN.

Announcement.

I hereby announce my candidacy for the Democratic nomination for the office of Sheriff of Red Lake county. If nominated and elected I will pledge myself to conduct the duties of the office in an absolutely fair and impartial manner according to law, and the best of my ability. I respectfully solicit your vote and support in my candidacy.

Yours very truly,
J. W. McGINTY.

NOTICE OF TAX SALE

Of Unredeemed Lands sn Red Lake County, Minnesota, Under Sections 936, 937 and 938, Revised Laws of 1905, as Amended by Chapter 430, General laws of 1907.

Pursuant to the provisions of Sections 936, 937 and 938 of the Revised Laws of 1905, as amended by Chapter 430 General laws of 1907, notice is hereby given that on Monday the 9th day of November, 1908, at 10 o.clock in the forenoon, at the office of the County Auditor in the county Court House at Red Lake Falls in Red Lake County, Minnesota, all tracts or parcels of land, situate in Red Lake County, bid in for the State, and not assigned to purchasers or redeemed within three years from the date of the tax sale at which said parcel were offered and so bid in by the State, will be offered at public sale, and will be sold to the highest bidder therefor. No parcel will be sold for a less sum than the aggregate taxes, penalties, interests and costs charged against it, unless the cash value thereof fairly determined by the State Auditor, shall be less than such aggregate, provided, however that all parcels bid in for the state, for the taxes of 1901, or prior years, and not assigned to purchasers, or redeemed as aforesaid, may be disposed of for one half of the total taxes as originally assessed. Purchasers shall forthwith pay the amount of their respective bids to the County Treasurer. Said sale will begin at the time and place named above and will continue from day to day until every such tract or parcel shall have been offered for sale, under the provisions of said statutes. The list of said real property, subject to said sale, and which will be so offered for sale, unless previously redeemed, is now on file in the office of said County Auditor, and of the State Auditor of said State.

Owners, or interested parties may redeem their property by paying the full amount due to the county Treasurer, at any time before sale, and within sixty (60) days after proof of service of the Notice of Expiration of Redemption has been filed with the County Auditor.

After the Notice of Expiration of Redemption has been served, as provided in Section 956, Revised Laws 1905, the Governor is authorized to issue a deed in the name of the State to the person entitled thereto. (See Section 938 R. L.)

Marlin

For shooting the swift flying, heavily feathered ducks and geese the Marlin 12-gauge repeating shotgun has no superior. This gun is exceedingly strong in construction and yet is not heavy. It is bored to throw an excellent pattern with great penetration. The solid top keeps out the weather and the brush and twigs of the blind, and the side ejector prevents the empty shells from being a nuisance to the shooter. It's the best bad weather gun.

The Marlin 12-gauge is suited to all forms of bird and trap shooting, and for durability, strength and ease of action is unexcelled. Made for both black and smokeless powders and for heavy loads. Two separate extractors make sure work.

Rendering Prompt Service.

On last Saturday a petition was forwarded to Congressman Steenerson asking that the present mail service between Garnes and Malone be changed to three times per week. The petition was signed by about all of the people living along the route and numerous patrons of the postoffice at Malone. One would naturally suppose that Mr. Steenerson would be pretty busy just now and that action might be delayed on a matter like this for a few days until after election, but Halvor maintained his record of giving good service and a letter received from him on Tuesday morning stated that the petition had been forwarded by him to the Postoffice Department with his recommendation that the change be made as asked. With Mr. Steenerson's recommendation there is little doubt but that the change will be made. It makes no difference how busy Mr. Steenerson may be in the political game, no want of his constituents goes unattended to for a day.

J. A. Walker was in from Lillo on Thursday attending to some business for the Telephone Co., of which he is Secretary. On his return he was accompanied by Mrs. M. Short, who has been the guest of her daughter Miss Maggie Short here during the past couple of weeks.

J. C. Parker, of the S. P. K. Lumber Co., returned on Thursday morning from Bemidji where he has been in attendance on Mrs. Parker, who is down with an attack of typhoid fever. Mr. Parker, says she is improving at present which will be welcome news to her acquaintances here.

Grunde Austad, the genial postmaster and storekeeper at Malone, was a business visitor in town on Tuesday. He expressed himself as being immensely pleased with the prompt action of Congressman Steenerson on the petition for a change of mail service between Garnes and Malone.

G. A. Kankel, the Red Lake Falls hardware dealer, died of typhoid fever at his home in that city on last Sunday morning, He was under thirty years of age and leaves his wife and a little daughter to mourn his untimely death. He was ill for about two weeks and a particularly sad feature is that Mrs. Kankel is also so seriously ill with the same disease that she has not yet been informed of her husband's death. The remains were taken to the family home in Fertile for interment.

The auction sale of A. M. Hass last Tuesbay was very largely attended and good prices were realized for the property sold. Mr. and Mrs. Hass and family, accompanied by Mr. Hass's father and mother, left on Wednesday evening for Merril, Wis., where they will make their home for the present. Before leaving Mr. Hass called at this office to say good-bye and pay his subscription to the PIONEER up to 1910 so to be sure and keep posted on the happenings among the large number of friends here who will regret his departure from this part of the county.

For Superintendent Of Schools.

HERMAN F. ANDERSON.

State Normal School,
Moorhead, Minn., Oct. 21, 1908.

To those concerned: Mr. H. F. Anderson has been known to me for a number of years, both as a student here and as a teacher and principal of schools in this state. Wherever he has been, he has shown those qualities of earnest endeavor and patient effort so needful in fulfilling the duties of the office to which he now aspires. His educational qualifications for the position are high. He is pleasant and agreeable to meet. His character is above reproach; in short, he is a gentleman. It is my belief that if he is honored with an election the citizens of Red Lake County will never regret it. Very truly yours, H. M. Stanford Department of Physical Sciences.

Sheriff of Red Lake County

Your Support and Vote Respectfully Solicted.

To The Voters.

I have received the Republican nomination for the office of Register of Deeds. I am a candidate for reelection. I ask a second term on the merits of my work in the office only. I invite all the voters to look over the work and see wehther or not it is satisfactory.

If you find that you can conscienciously support me at the coming election I will greatly appreciate your vote and any good word that you may say in my behalf.

Very truly yours,
E. L. QUIST.

Widow And Orphan.

Always get a square deal from the honeest, plain, straightforward Probate Judge Tarrant. Give the widow and Orphan a squre deal by re-electing a man that has always made a success of his own business. Vote for N. W. Tarrant and assure them protection. (adv.)

S. A. Swanson, Republican candidate for Judge of Probate, has been a resident of what is now Red Lake County for 27 years, coming here with his parents from New Jersey on April 12, 1881, and settling in "Black" River township. In 1892 he began teaching and divided his time between that vocation and work on the homestead until Dec. 26, 1896, when he was appointed the first Register of Deeds of Red Lake county in which capacity he served two years.

Since that he has asked for no county office, but he has twice been a candidate for the legislature; in 1900 carrying the county by over 300 for Represenative, and a second time in 1902, receiving a majority of 844 for State Senator, both times being defeated by the heavy opposition vote from the other counties in this district.

His fidelity to friends and fairness in all business transactions has gained him cordial support where he is known. As a candidate for Judge of Probate before the voters of Red Lake county, he asks a fair consideration from every voter in the county.

MAD PRANKS OF CRAZY MAN

NEW YORK IMMIGRATION OFFICIALS GET HELP OF THE JACK TARS.

A Crazy Hungarian Tenor Goes Violently Insane on Board Ship in Mid Ocean and Makes Trouble Until Arrival.

New York, Oct. 29.—Richard Lenz, a Herculean framed tenor who went insane on the Kron Prinz Wilhelm while she was in mid ocean, fought six immigration officials in the first cabin saloon of the liner at quarantine yesterday till they were exhausted.

It was only when reinforcements arrived in the shape of several husky members of the crew that he was subdued.

The strength of the maniac was such that he picked up men as if they were featherweights and hurled them about the cabin while the women screamed and male passengers looked on in stupefied amazement.

The battle with the tenor came as an exciting climax to his exploits on the voyage over.

When he boarded the ship he seemed peaceable enough, and his gentle manners and huge frame attracted much friendly attention. The ship was only two days out when insanity blazed out in a startling way.

Capt. Nierich was on the bridge when he suddenly felt a tap on his shoulder. He turned and saw Lenz.

"Let me take the ship awhile," he said. "You are tired and need rest. You know I am Emporor William, and I'm as good at sea as I am ashore."

The captain managed, by diplomacy, to get him off the bridge, telling him that it would be beneath his dignity to pilot a liner.

Lenz agreed with him, and for the remainder of the voyage he was kept quiet by a friend, Ferdinand Fritz, who, the passengers said, seemed to exert a remarkable influence over him. When Lenz learned today, however, that he was to be deported, his insanity took a violent form.

Lenz sang here at the German theater some years ago. He was on his way to join a Cincinnati opera company.

BANKER KIDNAPPED.

Washington Banker Is Made Prisoner, but Escapes.

Mount Vernon, Wash., Oct. 27.—While driving to Mount Vernon last night from his lumber camp, about fifteen miles from here, Edward English, a wealthy lumberman of Mount Vernon, was held up and kidnapped by a lone robber about three miles from town. The robber forced English to make a note payable at a Mount Vernon bank for $5,000 and write the following letter to his wife.

"Mrs. English: Dear Wife—I am held up and kidnapped for $5,000 and I am threatened with having my ears cut off if the money is not forthcoming by tomorrow noon. For God's sake make all haste. Show this to Mr. Hannay and solicit this sum.—Ed English."

Hannay is connected with a Mount Vernon bank.

The robber, within two miles of town, handed the note and letter to a passing traveler, telling him that English had been injured in a runaway and to take the missives to Mrs. English. This the stranger did.

Meanwhile the bandit left his victim tied to a tree, evidently intending to return to him in the morning to see if the ransom was forthcoming.

English, however, managed to break loose from the ropes which bound him and made his way to the home of Henry Day, about two miles from Mount Vernon, where he telephoned his wife and Sheriff Harmon of Skagit county.

Will Protect Farmers.

Lexington, Ky., Oct. 27.—"I will furnish soldiers for the protection of any farmer anywhere in Kentucky who wants to raise tobacco next year, if he fears night riders, and I will see that the law is upheld, and that murder and night riding is stopped, if I have to borrow $1,000,000 to do it."—Governor August E. Willson.

50 Years Old.

Washington, Oct. 27.—President Roosevelt was 50 years old yesterday. Twenty-eight strenuous birthdays have passed over Mr. Roosevelt's head since he left Harvard with his diploma in 1880.

Wiped Out by Flames.

Salisbury Beach, Mass., Oct. 28.—The fire which swept the summer settlement here early today was controlled about 5 a. m., after more than 100 cottages had been destroyed. The total damage is estimated at about $100,000. There were no lives lost.

At 3 a. m.

New York, Oct. 28.—For the first time in their history, at such an hour, the gray walls of the city hall were lighted up with red fire at 3 a. m. yesterday, when William J. Bryan, bareheaded and smiling, was introduced from the steps of the building to a big crowd of night workers gathered there to greet him and to hear him speak on the issues of the campaign.

The crowd was composed principally of employees in the big newspaper offices on Park Row, the telegraph offices and the general postoffice

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Yeggmen.

Duluth—That a well organized and desperate gang of professional bank thieves are operating around the lakes is no longer a matter of doubt. Within the past two months three attempts at bank robbery have been made in the different places.

The first was at Barnum, where, when the robbers were discovered in the principal bank attempting to blow open the safe, they stood off a number of citizens with shotguns.

The second attempt was at Biwabik, where they shot a passerby whom they believed had discovered them looting the bank, while the third was at Lake Nebagamon, where three charges of nitroglycerin were used to force the safe.

So far as known, the only haul the burglars have made was at Lake Nebagamon, where they secured $1,700.

Those experienced in the working of crooks of this kind believe that it is being done by an organized gang that has come into this part of the Northwest to loot banks where protection is not sufficient.

Butter and Cheese.

Mankato.—There were 87,044,817 pounds of butter produced in Minnesota creameries in 1907, according to figures just compiled by the state dairy and food commission. The wholesale value of the product is estimated at $23,502,100. There were 851 creameries in operation and 71,769 farmers supplied them, receiving $17,912,043 for their milk and cream, from 546,695 cows. The running expenses of the creameries were $2,187,373. They used 855,866,470 pounds of milk and 16,819,567 of cream. Seventy-four cheese factories operated in the state made 4,266,778 pounds of cheese, which at the average wholesale price of 12 cents brought $512,013. Less than half of the cows in the state worked for the creameries, so considerably over a million contributed to the state milk and cream supply. The value of the milk and cream sold to the people in the cities and towns last year is estimated at $19,000,000.

Robber Foiled.

Minneapolis.—Kicking a cash box out of the hands of a masked robber, a cash girl employed by Bannon & Co., 31 South Washington avenue, Minneapolis, saved her employers over $150 late one night and routed the thief.

At a late hour last night the man had not been apprehended, but the girl was rewarded for her kicking ability by her employers.

From the evidence procured by the detectives, it is said that the man secured a stepladder from the W. K. Morison Hardware company in the rear of Bannon's, tied a black handkerchief over his face, placed the ladder against the Bannon building and went to the window of the cashier's department. He probably knew the lay of the building and thought that no one was looking. He reached through the window of the cashier's table and grasped the heavy cash box.

At that moment the cash girl looked around, saw the masked bandit and, with a cream, kicked the box from his hand onto the floor.

Dragged From River.

St. Paul.—Isaac Speilmann, employed at the Palace clothing store in the tailoring department and who lodges at the New Grand hotel, Eighth and Robert streets, was dragged from the river by the crew of the steamer Hiawatha nearly exhausted. He told the police that three men whom he met at the hotel walked with him toward the river and after holding him up and taking $9 from his pockets pushed him into the river. He will be held for an examination today.

The crew of the steamer heard his cries for help and saw the bald head of a man protruding from the water while he was clinging to one of the posts in the river. The engineer of the steamer held him with a pike pole while two other members of the crew lowered a rowboat and finally rescued Speilmann.

Miscellaneous Notes.

St. Paul.—The body of a man supposed to be August Stahl of Stanley county, South Dakota was dragged out of the river at the foot of Jackson street.

Duluth.—The second dead body found in the waterfront this week was taken from the bay near Singer dock. The man was about five feet ten, had brown hair and a light mustache. He was about thirty years of age and a laborer. He has not been identified.

"In Montana," the play which will be the attraction at the Bijou Opera House, Minneapolis, the week of November 1st, life on the plains is shown in all its phases. There is the big-hearted ranchman, the typical western girl, the foreman, the cowpuncher and ranch hands. The piece has been compared by many who have seen it as the equal of "Arizona" and "The Virginian," and in some respects, is said to surpass them.

Andover.—Robert G. Hopwood, of Minneapolis, has been elected captain of the Phillips-Andover academy track team to succeed E. A. Rosendale, who failed to return to the academy.

Bena.—Robbers entered the general store of Ernest Fleming and blew up the safe. They succeeded in getting away with $1,500 in currency, $200 in stamps and $300 in checks.

Mankato.—The Twenty-second meeting of the Southern Minnesota Teachers' association will be held in this city Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Nov. 5, 6 and 7.

A DEPOSED MINISTER

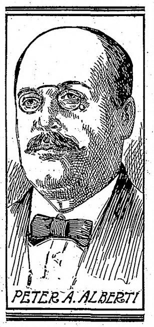
PETER ALBERTI, DANISH STATESMAN AND BANK WRECKER.

Poor Peasants of His Country, Defrauded of Millions Through His Ambition to Become Rich in a Short Time.

London.—Denmark's deposed minister of justice, Peter Adler Alberti, who is now awaiting trial on his confession that he embezzled deposits amounting to about $3,000,000 from a bank whose patrons were chiefly poor peasants, came to his downfall through an ambition to become very rich in a short time. He is said to have lost the money of the depositors through rash investments in American stocks, but his losses were apparently not all at one time, for, according to his own story, he has falsified the books of the bank for the last 14 years.

Alberti was born June 10, 1851. His father was prominent in politics and was the founder of the bank which has been ruined. The young man was bred to the law and practiced the profession for a number of years. During this practice he developed a talent for organization, starting a fire insurance company and a company for the exportation of butter to England. Both the elder and the younger Alberti were identified with the Danish agricultural interests in politics and in business, these interests being the leading ones of the nation. The bank founded by the elder Alberti was named "Bondenstandens Sparekasse"—Peasants' Savings bank—and was considered, until the revelations of the younger Alberti's perfidy, one of the soundest financial institutions in Denmark.

While visiting London for the purpose of transacting business for the butter export company, Alberti had an opportunity of making, unobserved by his countrymen, the investments that turned out ruinously for him and disastrously for the people who trusted him. His victims were not only the peasant depositors in the bank, but also several exporting and manufacturing firms in which he was interested and individuals who advanced him large sums of money. Even King Frederik VIII. is said to have been Alberti's creditor to the amount of $400,000.



As a politician Alberti became prominent about 1892. He was a reformer and a leader who, despite his treachery in business, was a legislator of value to the nation. It is generally admitted that in his early political career he meant well for Denmark and few criticisms of this part of his career are heard. But his later business life was subjected to close scrutiny by his political enemies and this led to his expose.

King Christian, who died in January, 1906, trusted Alberti implicitly. His son, the present king, continued to have faith in the banker-minister of justice. Last June, when the leaders of the Social Democrats fiercely assailed Alberti, King Frederik refused to believe that his trusted minister could have done anything wrong and bestowed fresh honors on him. From Germany, Norway and Greece, also, Alberti received honors in the form of decorations.

In appearance Alberti in his prosperity was handsome and dignified possessing an air of authority and ability that made for him many admirers and supporters. An indefatigable worker, he had the faculty of inspiring others to work hard also, and up to the last was calm and apparently undisturbed by the indignation he had roused.

Alberti has been twice married. His first wife was divorced from him and is married to the Danish tenor, Peter Cornelius, who is considered one of the greatest living singers of Wagner operas. The second wife of Alberti is trying to intercede for him on the plea that he cannot face a long term of imprisonment because of a serious disease of which he is a victim, and that he has done signal service for the state. Her pleas are not likely to be of avail, for all Denmark regards it as a national calamity that Alberti should have proved so great a thief, and is determined that he shall be punished.

PERUNA A TONIC OF GREAT USEFULNESS.

HON. R. S. THARIN.

Hon. R. S. Tharin, Attorney at Law and counsel for Anti-Trust League, writes from Pennsylvania Ave., N. W., Washington, D. C., as follows:

"Having used Peruna for catarrhal disorders, I am able to testify to its great remedial excellence and do not hesitate to give it my emphatic endorsement and earnest recommendation to all persons affected by that disorder. It is also a tonic of great usefulness."

Mr. T. Barnecott, West Aylmer, Ontario, Can., writes: "Last winter I was ill with pneumonia after having la grippe. I took Peruna for two months, when I became quite well. I also induced a young lady, who was all run down and confined to the house, to take Peruna, and after taking Peruna for three months she is able to follow her trade of tailoring. I can recommend Peruna for all such who are ill and require a tonic."

The Passing of Brickville

By Joseph N. Quail

(Copyright by Shortstory Pub. Co.)

The destiny of Brickville was decided when Pikey McGinn's chimney caught fire, and in that flame the Brickvillian hope of a metropolis in the heart of the Bad Lands went up in smoke.

Brickville didn't realize it at the moment, because, paradoxical as it may seem, the little blaze which destroyed the town was easily got under control. The place hadn't progressed as far as a fire department, and it would not have helped matters if it had. A tipsy cowboy who had been sampling Pikey's hardware vaulted to the back of a wolfish-looking cayuse, yelled a few times in hearty Montana fashion, and then swung his riata at the chimney. As the noose fell fair about the stack of bricks he dug spurs into the sides of his mount and made a run upon the rope.

The chimney came down with a crash; the fire was out; the fate of Brickville was written.

That is why the town does not appear upon any map. But if ever you have ridden over the Northern Pacific you can probably recall a long and narrow valley to the north as you passed out of the Bad Lands of Dakota into the Bad Lands of Montana. That is where Brickville stood. The soil all about is hard and dry and red, and there is no verdure. Not anywhere in sight is there a tree. The side hills are seamed with black strata, and the rains have carried stains from these and streaked the valley with them on both sides of the muddy little stream which winds away to the south.

The black strata are seams of bituminous coal, and it was in mining this coal that the Brickvillians made their living. There is still pay in these streaks, but the people who worked them have drifted away, and on the site of the town prairie dogs and coyotes and rattlesnakes hold annual conventions which never adjourn.

If any place ever fully justified its name, that place was Brickville. At the height of its prosperity it had, exclusive of sheds and stables, 87 one-story buildings, including the railroad station, the saloon and the tonsorial parlor, and every one of them was of brick—even the sheds. There were optimists who looked forward to a brick court-house and a brick jail, and but for the fire in Pikey McGinn's chimney these aspirations might have been realized.

Pierre Succotash played perhaps the most prominent part in Brickville's destruction. Pierre was a French-Canadian, whose rear name had come into collision with Brickville's sense of propriety, and some of its letters were dislocated by the shock. He had been gold mining in British Columbia, and no one had inquired very closely into the reason of his coming from a gold to a coal camp; it would have established an uncomfortable precedent. But he went nosing about the wreck of that chimney, as he went nosing into everything that happened in town; and Fred Ritchie, who conducted "the tonsorial parlor," which was across the street from McGinn's, saw him suddenly dart in and pick up a broken brick.

Now Fred and Succotash had said some unpleasant things to each other once upon a time, and Fred, believing that Pierre was courting trouble, promptly ran in for his gun; but when he came out Succotash was nowhere to be seen.

Next morning Pikey found that some one had carried off nearly half of his chimney bricks, and he promptly declared it to be the work of Slanteye McCafferty, his hated rival in the hardware business. Mac denied this in vigorous language, and a gunplay was imminent when the whisky agent happened along and announced a reduction in rates by the barrel; and then they had a drink, and ordered half a barrel each, and the hatchet was buried.

But war was on hotter than ever next day, for the remainder of Pikey's loose bricks had disappeared in the night. Pikey swore that Slanteye was planning a cheap extension to his gin mill, and Mac retorted that he would be a fool indeed to go around picking up hoodoos that had fallen from his rival's leaky roof.

Then each got a shotgun and stood out in front of his saloon waiting for the other to come along. And the result of this was that trade fell off in both places, for Brickvillians knew that shotguns scattered their charges and they refused to slake their thirst when there was a chance that a stray buckshot might next moment spring them aleak. So it was that business interests induced the rivals for a second time to declare a truce, and then the town breathed easier and drank oftener.

A week later Succotash was a passenger on a west-bound express with a ticket to Glendive in his hat band. And the next east-bound freight brought in a very scarce article—some lumber—and a heavy iron roller marked with his name. On his return he installed the roller in the brick shack where he slept and put a big padlock on the door. What he did in that place was the town mystery. But he was flush of money, and one day he caused a sensation. He became the owner of a saloon, having bought out Pikey McGinn—taking bar, stock, goodwill and building.

Then, to the greater surprise of Brickville, he promptly sold to Pikey's hated rival everything but the building. Pikey swore it was all a put-up job, and left town in disgust. Succotash said it was because he intended to tear down the old house and put up a better one. And tear down the old place he did, and he carted the bricks away to his mystery shed—to store them there until he was ready to build, he said.

But the only thing that Pierre built at that time was a wooden water trough, leading from his well to the brick shed. Most of the day and all of the night he locked himself in that shed with his secret. Those who passed in the rear of the place declared that they could hear him grinding something, and because of a pool of red water which had accumulated near the shed they thought it must be the bricks.

Now, Fred Ritchie was one of those who regarded Pierre's conduct as most suspicious. He gave a good deal of thought to the mystery of the shed and the tearing down of McGinn's saloon, and finally he recalled having seen Succotash grab that piece of brick and make off with it. Then it occurred to him also that it was Pierre who had caused all the trouble between Pikey and Slanteye by stealing the chimney. And one day when Succotash was down in town buying provisions Fred sneaked out the back way of his shop with a bit and stock and bored a hole in the mortar between the bricks of Pierre's shed to discover what his secret might be. As Pierre worked that night Fred had his eye glued to this hole and noted what he was doing.

Next morning his neighbors were surprised at finding that Ritchie's chimney had fallen during the night, and they were astonished to see Fred carrying the bricks into his barber shop and piling them up with great care. He wasn't going to have them stolen, as Pikey's were, he told them. And as they passed by the shop later in the day and looked in they saw him pounding away at the bricks, breaking them into bits and scanning each piece carefully.

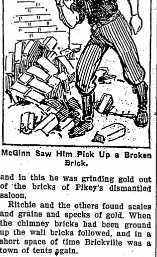
The secret was a secret no longer. Succotash had found gold in the piece of brick that Ritchie had seen him dart forward to pick up, and he had found more in the bricks he had stolen from Pikey. With the proceeds he had set up an arastra in the shed, and in this he was grinding gold out of the bricks of Pikey's dismantled saloon.



McGinn Saw Him Pick Up a Broken Brick.

Ritchie and the others found scales and grains and specks of gold. When the chimney bricks had been ground up the wall bricks followed, and in a short space of time Brickville was a town of tents again.

Then it was announced suddenly that Succotash and Ritchie had patched up their trouble and that Pierre had sold his arastra to Fred. This was followed by Pierre's departure from town. "He has made his pile," the Brickvillians said to one another.

The coal pits had been abandoned for this new method of gold mining, and there wasn't a whole brick building in the place when a freight brakeman one day brought a startling piece of news into the town.

Succotash had bought a claybank in Basin, and a brickyard as well; and he had astonished the good people of that nook in the mountains by converting this claybank into a gold mine and this brickyard into a mill in which to treat his rich clay, for the gold could not be freed by ordinary process of placer washing.

Then Brickville collectively kicked itself for not having thought to trace out this brickyard before the man from Canada; and the Brickvillians folded their tents and went scurrying away to the mountains to search there for other claybanks that were studded with nuggets of gold.

ROAD AND FARM IMPROVEMENT

GUARD AGAINST FALLING TONGUE

Good Way to Prevent a Freqeunt Cause of Trouble.

To prevent the wagon tongue that is not bolted to the neck yoke from falling down when the tugs come unhitched or the doubletrees or singletrees break causing runaways or other trouble, simply drill holes through the end of the tongue irons and bore out the wood. Have a narrow piece of iron one-half inch thick made to fit on the lower side of the tongue with holes to correspond with the holes in the tongue irons.

The front end of the iron should be tapering, while the end in front of the neck yoke shoud have a shoulder one inch long so the neck yoke ring can pass under in case of the tugs becoming unfastened.

Guard for Neck Yoke.

This safety iron will catch the ring every time, yet the neck yoke can be put on or taken off over it in ordinary cases where rings are of the usual size. We consider this a better arrangement, says the Prairie Farmer, than springs or a loose bolt through the tongue that will get bent and make trouble.

ROADS ON HILLS.

How They May Be Protected from Gullying.

Where the road is built on a steep grade some provision should be made to prevent the washing of the gutters into deep gullies. This can be done by paving the bottoms and sides of the gutters with brick or field stones. In order to make the flow as small as possible in side ditches it is often advisable to construct frequent outlets into the adjacent fields or streams, or, if possible, to lay underground pipes or blind drains with screened openings into side ditches at frequent intervals. The size of side ditches should depend upon the amount of water they are expected to carry. If possible they should be located at least three feet from the edge of the traveled roadway.

All side ditches should have a gradual fall of at least half a foot in every 100 feet. Their sides, particularly those sloping toward the roadway, should be broad and flaring, so as to prevent accidents as well as the caving in of their banks. Their bottoms should be wide enough to carry the largest amount of water that is likel to flow through them at any one time. Sometimes the only ditches necessary to carry off the surface water are those made with the road machine. The blade of the machine may be set at any desired angle, and when drawn along by horses or by a traction engine cuts into the surface and spreads the earth uniformly over the traveled way.—Bulletin Department of Agriculture.

MAKING CEMENT BRICK.

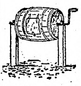
Farmer Who Has Made Them Tells of His Methods.



I bought two second-hand brick molds and used them to mold cement bricks. They worked well and I experienced no trouble, but found mixing the sand and cement the hardest part. I had an old vinegar barrel put to use by placing a grindstone crank on one end and a pinion on the other. Two strong posts were set in the ground and the barrel hung over two pieces of round iron driven into the posts, says Farm and Home. A square hole was cut on side of barrel and covered with a piece of sheet iron hinged and a button to fasten.

The sand and cement were dampened, shoveled into the barrel and a boy turned the crank. The mixing was done as fast as two men could mold, with a boy to sprinkle the brick to prevent drying too fast. Enough brick were made in two days to build a shed 16x16 feet. The cost was not half that of lumber. The bricklayer who laid the brick said they were the best he ever laid.

Treat Smutty Seed Wheat.

If it is necessary to sow seed wheat from a crop which has been attacked by stinking smut the seed should first be treated with formalin. One pint of formalin in 40 gallons water will treat 50 bushels of wheat. Spread it out on a clean, tight floor previously sterilized with the formalin solution. Sprinkle thoroughly until every kernel is wet. Sprinkling should be repeated until at least three quarts of solution per bushel of grain have been absorbed. Cover the pile with cloth or canvas for two hours, then shovel the grain over at intervals to dry it and sow at once. All bags and shovels used in handling the grain must be carefully disinfected.

Imaginative Irish.

The quality which distinguishes ourselves (the Irish) from our English brethren is the divine possession of imagination.—Dublin Irish Homestead.

One of the Essentials

of the happy homes of to-day is a vast fund of information as to the best methods of promoting health and happiness and right living and knowledge of the world's best products.

Products of actual excellence and reasonable claims truthfully presented and which have attained to world-wide acceptance through the approval of the Well-Informed of the World; not of individuals only, but of the many who have the happy faculty of selecting and obtaining the best the world affords.

One of the products of that class, of known component parts, an Ethical remedy, approved by physicians and commended by the Well-Informed of the World as a valuable and wholesome family laxative is the well-known Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna. To get its beneficial effects always buy the genuine, manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., only, and for sale by all leading druggists.

TOO MUCH.

Arabella—Ah, John, there was a time when you couldn't see enough of me.

John—Well, I can see plenty of you now, can't I?

What the Rod Was For.

"My goodness, Mose Fowler!" exclaimed the minister, "is yo' goin' fishin' at yo' age?"

"No, I ain't goin' fishin', suh," protested Fowler. "I know it ain't seemly, suh, but yo' sermon las' Sunday on sparin' de rod made sich an impression on me, suh, dat I done borrer dis rod off Dick Perkins, an' I'se goin' t' stan' mah whole thuteen chillen in a row, suh, an' jes' make one good job outer it, so's they won't spile; an' den I kin return de rod wif a cl'ar conscience, suh."

Mike and the Motorists.

An Irishman one day was told to put up a signboard on which were the words: "To Motorists—this hill is dangerous."

Away went Mike with the signboard and placed it at the bottom of a very steep hill. A few days later his employer went to see how the board was put up, and, finding it at the bottom of the hill, sought and found Mike.

"You blooming fool!' he cried, "why didn't you put that sign in the right place?"

Naming the Culprit.

A member of the flock was nodding with closed eyes during the sermon. The preacher said:

"I think mebbe some membah has been up too late durin' the ebenin' preceedin'. He better set up or I'll name him."

Failing to accomplish the desired result the preacher soon stopped his sermon again. Shaking his finger at the culprit, he shouted:

"Jim Shepherd, dis is de secon time I stops to wake yo' up! If I have to stop a third time I'll expose yo' by name to de whole congregashun!"

ASTONISHED THE DOCTOR

Old Lady Got Well with Change of Food.

A great scientist has said we can put off "old age" if we can only nourish the body properly.

To do this the right kind of food, of course, is necessary. The body manufactures poisons in the stomach and intestines from certain kinds of food stuffs and unless sufficient of the right kind is used, the injurious elements overcome the good.

"My grandmother, 71 years old," writes a N. Y. lady, "had been an invalid for 18 years from what was called consumption of the stomach and bowels. The doctor had given her up to die.

"I saw so much about Grape-Nuts that I persuaded Grandmother to try it. She could not keep anything on her stomach for more than a few minutes.

"She began Grape-Nuts with only a teaspoonful. As that did not distress her and as she could retain it, she took a little more until she could take all of 4 teaspoonfuls at a meal.

"Then she began to gain and grow strong and her trouble in the stomach was gone entirely. She got to enjoy good health for one so old and we know Grape-Nuts saved her life.

"The doctor was astonished that instead of dying she got well, and without a drop of medicine after she began the Grape-Nuts." "There's a Reason."

TROUBLE AHEAD.

He—I fear the worst.

She—What's happened, George?

He—Your father has paid back that $25 he borrowed.

BREAKS A COLD PROMPTLY

One ounce of Compound Syrup of Sarsaparilla, one ounce Toris Compound and one-half pint of good whiskey, mix and shake thoroughly each time and use in doses of a tablespoonful every four hours.

This if followed up will cure an acute cold in 24 hours. The ingredients can be gotten at any drug store.

Fujiyama Modernized.

The beautiful mountain peak of Fujiyama, which is regarded by the Japanese as little short of sacred, is to be modernized by electricity. For the benefit of tourists the mountain top and the trail to it will be illuminated by electric lights. Hotels and refreshments houses will be erected on the mountain slope, as well as telephone and telegraph stations.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF RED LAKE COUNTY

Subscription price, $1.50 per year
If paid in advance, $1.00.

Entered at the Post-office in Plummer, Minn. as Second Class Mail Matter.

Ever since Halvor Steenerson has been in Congress he has stood for a square deal to every man in his constituency and the poor man was treated as courteously and fairly as the rich. Some of the grafters and schemers dont like him because he refused to be guided by their wishes or help them in questionable schemes. When a man tells you Halvor Steenerson is not on the square if you trace up their story closely you'll find a rotten botton to it.

Ole Sageng, of Otter Tail county, is sure enough trying to run for Congress. Ole's chief claim to the suffrage of the voters is that he is a farmer and does his own plowing. This may or may not be any recommendation for Ole but we believe he will have to do his plowing next spring while Halvor Steenerson is doing things for his constituents in Washington. If Ole neglects his plowing in the fall he might also forget to work for his district when he ought to.

The State Boad of Equalization, one of Governor Johnson's campaign arguments, has completed its duties for this year. They reduced the taxable valuation of the iron mines and property owned by the steel trust something like $11,000.000 and have boosted the valuation of farm property sufficient to make up for the difference. The men who are telling the farmers to vote for Johnson like to talk about what a polished individual the governor is but they prefer not to mention such things as the action of this board of equalization.

To The Votes of Red Lake County.

I am a nominee for the office of County Superintendent of Schools, and hereby ask for your votes and kind influence. I have lived in this county for 26 years and its future is my future. By working early and late on the farm, I saved enough to pay my way thru college, and I now hold the Bachelor of Arts Degree and a Professional First Grade Certificate. I have had ten years experience in school work, and feel capable of caring for the office in a reliable and efficient manner. If elected it will be a pleasure for me to take charge of the schools of the county and my utmost effort will be devoted to their improvement and progress.

O. A. NAPLIN.

Announcement.

I hereby announce my candidacy for the Democratic nomination for the office of Sheriff of Red Lake county. If nominated and elected I will pledge myself to conduct the duties of the office in an absolutely fair and impartial manner according to law, and the best of my ability. I respectfully solicit your vote and support in my candidacy.

Yours very truly,
J. W. McGINTY.

ALEX. A. SWEAAS
Candidate For
COUNTY AUDITOR OF RED LAKE COUNTY

To the Voters of Red Lake County:

Whereas, some remarks and charges have been made against me. Which I shall brand as DEFAMATORY FALSEHOOD and LIES. Those remarks were brough to me direct from the Peoples State Bank, the head-quarters for forcing Mr. O'Brien back in the Auditor's office.

Mr. O'Brien is a personal friend of mine, and I have none but the best words to speak about him personally. My defense as set forth hereinafter is against the "Lineup" or Steering Committee with their head-quarters in the Peoples State Bank of Thief Biver Falls.

I have no desire whatsoever to have this published, except that it is in self-defance, To defend my own character, which I would not trade off with any of the Line-up committee, even if the whole Peoples State Bank was offered me to-boot. And they know it too.

I honestly and frankly affirm that I have never, during my campaign this year, spoken to or approched any banker in Red Lake County about their support or their votes, because, I am not a corporation candidate; I represent the INDUSTRIAL ARMY—the farmers and labor classes, not the leeches. And they are well aware of the facts that if I am elected to the office that the GRAFTS and all PROFUSE and LAVISH expenses which Red Lake County has been subjected to since its organization will be cut out; That is way they made remarks and charges against me for the purpqse of fooling and scaring the voters. See?

I just wish to say one word to you Mr. voter of Red Lake County that if I am elected to that office I shall without fear or favor do my sworn duty, and I shall keep you posted also.

My Platform is, Social and Political Economy; To be your SERVANT not your MASTER.

Respectfully Yours,
Alex A. Sweaas.

NOTICE OF TAX SALE

Of Unredeemed Lands sn Red Lake County, Minnesota, Under Sections 936, 937 and 938, Revised Laws of 1905, as Amended by Chapter 430, General laws of 1907.

Pursuant to the provisions of Sections 936, 937 and 938 of the Revised Laws of 1905, as amended by Chapter 430 General laws of 1907, notice is hereby given that on Monday the 9th day of November, 1908, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, at the office of the County Auditor in the county Court House at Red Lake Falls in Red Lake County, Minnesota, all tracts or parcels of land, situate in Red Lake County, bid in for the State, and not assigned to purchasers or redeemed within three years from the date of the tax sale at which said parcels were offered and so bid in by the State, will be offered at public sale, and will be sold to the highest bidder therefor. No parcel will be sold for a less sum than the aggregate taxes, penalties, interests and costs charged against it, unless the cash value thereof fairly determined by the State Auditor, shall be less than such aggregate; provided, however, that all parcels bid in for the state, for the taxes of 1901, or prior years, and not assigned to purchasers, or redeemed as aforesaid, may be disposed of for one half of the total taxes as originally assessed, Purchasers shall forthwith pay the amount of their respective bids to the County Treasurer. Said sale will begin at the time and place named above and will continue from day to day until every such tract or parcel shall have been offered for sale, under the provisions of said statutes. The list of said real property, subject to said sale, and which will be so offered for sale, unless previously redeemed, is now on file in the office of said County Auditor, and of the State Auditor of said State.

Owners, or interested parties may redeem their property by paying the full amount due to the county Treasurer, at any time before sale, and within sixty (60) days after proof of service of the Notice of Expiration of Redemption has been filed with the County Auditor.

After the Notice of Expiration of Redemption has been served, as provided in Section 956, Revised Laws 1905, the Governor is authorized to issue a deed in the name of the State to the person entitled thereto. (See Section 938 R. L.)

Who is the Firebug?

On last Monday night Dan Carroll, of Mayfield township, had his stacks of flax destroyed by fire. The threshing rig had pulled in to his place to thresh the flax and, according to reports brought in by some of the neighbor, the fire started some time after the crew had retired for the night and when they were ready to thresh in the morning they found nothing put a pile of smouldering ashes. Two years ago Mr. Carrol lost his barn and granary with a quantity of grain by fire. He was sick in the hospital at Fosston at that time and it was pretty generally hinted that some one had set the fire. Some of the people out there state that they believe this fire was also maliciously set and if the individual who is doing that kind of work is discovered he will be severely dealt with.

Hearn is a Creative Artist.

Hearn's creative faculty began where creation is commonly held to end, with the material given. Of the creative gift in the sense in which the phrase is applied to the poet he had not a particle. He was not a maker, but a shaper. Dr. Gould puts the matter bluntly when he says, "He had no original thing to say, for he was entirely without creative power and had always to borrow theme and plot." And again: "Clearly and patently it was a mind without creative ability, spring or the desire for it. It was a mind improcreant by inheritance and by education, by necessity and by training, by poverty internal and external." The truth in these words becomes evident when one recalls the failure as fiction of every one of Hearn's attempts in this field and the fact that his greatest successes were won in reclothing the ideas of other men.—Forum.

Very Clever.

They tell a story in London of a certain peer who had never before shown the slightest interest in horse racing that he surprised a young man of his acquaintance by asking him apropos of nothing which horse had won the Derby. The young man told him. "That was very clever of him," replied the peer. "Was it the first time he tried it?" The young man stared, but said "Yes." "Then I call it very clever of him," replied the noble but incomplete sportsman, "to win the Derby the first time he tried for it."

Pleasant For the Lender.

"There," said Dubley, adding up the column of figures, "a total of $652. guess that's all. Oh, no; there's $30 I forgot! Gee! I wish somebody would lend me $682. Can you do it, old man?"

"What for?" demanded Markley.

"Why, I want to get out of debt."—Philadelphia Press.

VANITY OF CONVICTS.

The Way Some Men Spruce Up In the Penitentiary.

"The vainest lot of men I ever did know are behind these walls," remarked a convict in the penitentiary. "For fastidious dressing and cleanliness I have never seen anything like it. Those who have been accustomed to slicking up on the outside grow much worse in here, and those who never even combed their hair on the outside have it as cleanly parted as they can. I know of a hundred instances where convicts have risked being paddled or having time taken away just for the sake of shaving. They get hold of a razor or improvise one and keep it in their cells. They all have mirrors in their cells along with the calendars.

"I know of one instance of a trusted prisoner who begged for weeks to be allowed to wear a hat instead of the prison cap because he thought he did not look well in it. Whenever they get an opportunity they press their trousers. They save collars for Sundays and appear very clean and neat and nice in chapel. I guess it is all because they have time to think about themselves more than ever. If a man has nothing but himself to think about he takes more pride in himself. Or maybe they want something with which to pass away the time in their cells."—Columbus Dispatch.

Blankets of Bark.

In Ecuador, one of the South American republics, the bark of a tree which grows on the slopes of the Andes is utilized for the making of blankets. The blanket is over six feet long and over five feet wide and is as soft and pliable as though it were made of flannel. It is about the thickness of a good flannel blanket and can be rolled up and put in a strap without hurting or injuring it. This tree or bark blanket is merely a strip of bark cut from a section of the trunk of the blanket or demajagua tree. The Indians make a cutting around the trunk to get it, and they prepare it by soaking it in water until it is soft. It is then pounded so that the rough outside can be stripped off and the inside alone left. The inside is of fine fibers so joined together by nature that it makes a beautiful blanket, warm enough to be used as a cover and soft enough for a mattress.

PUBLIC PUNISHMENT.

The Days of the Whipping Post, Stocks and Branding Irons.

Up until the end of the war and a little while after the whipping post and stocks stood not far from the northwest corner of the courthouse and between that building and the present postoffice, and there the last whipping took place, though as it began it was sought to be stopped by a federal officer. The sheriff was, however, simply carrying out the mandate of the old court of pleas and quarter sessions.

In those days the stocks and the whipping post, too, were special attractions, notably to boys. The latter were allowed to ridicule people who sat in the stocks, which held their hands and feet, but not to throw anything at them.

Of course this deprived the boys of some degree of pleasure, yet they contrived to get a good deal of fun out of the thing anyway. It seems odd now even to think of such scenes as these must have been. Figure to yourself passing by the courthouse green at Charlotte or Raleigh and seeing a gentleman held by the ankles and wrists by wooden bars, sitting there in the sunshine for all the world to look at.

Those were the days of the branding iron too. A set of gyves of iron, in use for holding the ankles or wrists, are on exhibition here, but of branding irons there are none. These were used here in January, 1865, for the last time.—Raleigh Cor. Charlotte Observer.

Queer Wedding Effigy.

There is a curious custom still prevalent in the Bellary district of India in connection with the wedding ceremonies among certain Brahman families. Just prior to the close of the feasting a hideous effigy of a male figure, fantastically robed in rags, supposed to represent the bridegroom's father, is carried along the streets in procession under the shade of a sieve adorned with tassels of onions and margosa leaves. Every few yards during the procession the feet of the effigy have to be reverently washed and its forehead decorated with a caste mark by its living spouse, the bridegroom's mother. The bridegroom's other female relations have several mock attentions paid to them by the women of the bride's party.—St. James' Gazette.

NEW DISTRICTS AND NEW RAILWAYS

WESTERN CANADA AFFORDS BETTER CONDITIONS THAN EVER FOR SETTLEMENT.

To the Editor — Sir:—Doubtless many of your readers will be pleased to have some word from the grain fields of Western Canada, where such a large number of Americans have made their home during the past few years. It is pleasing to be able to report that generally the wheat yield has been good; it will average about 20 bushels to the acre. There will be many cases where the yield will go 35 bushels to the acre, and others where 50 bushels to the acre has been recorded. The oat and barley crop has been splendid. The prices of all grains will bring to the farmers a magnificent return for their labors. An instance has been brought to my notice of a farmer in the Pincher Creek (Southern Alberta) district—where winter wheat is grown—who made a net profit of $19.55 per acre, or little less than the selling price of his land. 30, 40, and 50 bushel yields are recorded there. The beauty about the lands in Western Canada is that they are so well adapted to grain-raising, while the luxuriant grasses that grow everywhere in abundance make the best possible feed for fattening cattle or for those used for dairying purposes.

The new homestead regulations which went into force September, 1908, attracted thousands of new settlers. It is now possible to secure 160 acres in addition to the 160 acres as a free grant, by paying $3.00 an acre for it. Particulars as to how to do this and as to the railway rates can be secured from the Canadian Government Agents.

"The development throughout Western Canada during the next ten years will probably exceed that of any other country in the world's history," is not the statement of an optimistic Canadian from the banks of the Saskatchewan, but of Mr. Leslie M. Shaw of New York, ex-Secretary of the United States Treasury under the late President McKinley and President Roosevelt, and considered one of the ablest financiers of the United States. "Our railway companies sold a good deal of their land at from three to five dollars an acre, and now the owners are selling the same land at from fifty to seventy-five dollars, and buying more up in Canada at from ten to fifteen."

The editor of the Monticello (Iowa) Express made a trip through Western Canada last August, and was greatly impressed. He says: "One cannot cross Western Canada to the mountains without being impressed with its immensity of territory and its future prospects. Where I expected to find frontier villages there were substantially built cities and towns with every modern convenience. It was formerly supposed that the climate was too severe for it to be thought of as an agricultural country, but its wheat-raising possibilities have been amply tested. We drew from Ontario many of our best farmers and most progressive citizens. Now the Americans are emigrating in greater numbers to Western Canada. Seventy-five per cent. of the settlers in that good country located southeast of Moose Jaw and Regina are Americans. Canada is well pleased with them and is ready to welcome thousands more."

Colombia's One Iron Foundry.

The only iron foundry in Colombia, South America, is at Bogota. It is known as La Paradera and is operated on a small scale, native ores being smelted, the iron being subsequently remelted for casting purposes. There are several commercial iron deposits in the interior of the country, and one ore body situated near the coast of the Caribbean sea is now being drilled by American engineers.

320 Acres of Wheat Land
IN WESTERN CANADA
WILL MAKE YOU RICH

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

Fifty bushels per acre have been grown. General average greater than in any other part of the continent. Under new regulations it is possible to secure a homestead of 160 acres free, and additional 160 acres at $3 per acre.

"The development of the country has made marvellous strides. It is a revelation, a record of conquest by settlement that is remarkable."—Extract from correspondence of a National Editor, who visited Canada in August last.

The grain crop of 1908 will net many farmers $20.00 to $25.00 per acre. Grain-raising, mixed farming and dairying are the principal industries. Climate is excellent; social conditions the best; railway advantages unequalled; schools, churches and markets close at hand. Land may also be purchased from railway and land companies.

Various "Schools" of Painters.

The Munich Jugend has discovered five signs by which to detect the school to which a painter belongs: (1) If he paints the sky gray and the grass black, he belongs to the good old classical school. (2) If he paints the sky blue and the grass green, he is a realist. (3) If he paints the sky green and the grass blue, he is an impressionist. (4) If he paints the sky yellow and the grass purple, he is a colorist. (5) If he paints the sky black and the grass red, he shows possession of great decorative talent.

GOV. JOHNSON AGAIN ELECTED

HIS MAJORITY WILL NOT BE AS LARGE AS TWO YEARS AGO.

Late Returns Place His Majority at About 25,000. The Country as Well as Cities Helped Materially to Swell His Figures.

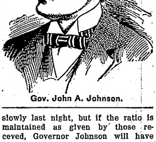
Minneapolis, Minn., November 5.—The returns from Minnesota in the governorship contest continue to be more or less incomplete. It can be asserted, however, that Taft has carried the state by 80,000 and that in the face of this, Johnson has swept the state by 25,000.

The city of Duluth, which the Republicans had expected to carry for Jacobson, has given Johnson a majority of 939, while reports from all sections of the country, includidg the city of Duluth, and with 70 precincts to hear from, give Johnson the county by 715. The tonnage tax fight in St. Louis county and other issues lead the Republicans to expect better results than this.

Minneapolis, Nov. 4.—Governor John A. Johnson seems to have been re-elected governor of Minnesota. W. H. Taft has carried the state overwhelmingly. Returns came in very slowly last night, but if the ratio is maintained as given by those receved, Governor Johnson will have been re-elected by a majority of from 10,000 to 12,000.



Gov. John A. Johnson.

Returns from the country districts may change this, but the first reports do not indicate that such a change is probable.

Confidence was maintained at Republican headquarters in St. Paul last night and Chairman A. D. Brown insisted that Jacobson was elected.

Chairman Frank A. Day stated that he thought Johnson was elected by a probable majority of from 20,000 to 25,000.

The returns received indicate that Hennepin's big vote has again changed the result and that the Democratic candidate maintains much of hs popularity here. Johnson has carried the city of Minneapolis by about ten thousand. This is a falling off of about five thousand over two years ago, but in a presidential year it is a splendid endorsement for the Democratic candidate.

Ramsey county has given Johnson about 7,000 majority, which leaves Jacobson a majority of about 17,000 to overcome from the country, which early returns indicated he could not do.

Throughout the state the returns show, with the exception of Hennepin county, that Johnson's vote will be about the same that he received when he ran against Robert C. Dunn, four years ago.

St. Louis Disappointment.

St. Louis county has been a disappointment to the Republicans. The Republican leaders had confidently expected that they would carry the city of Duluth, but returns last night showed that Johnson had carried it by about 500, although Republican leaders there claimed that Jacobson would probably carry the county.

In Hennepin, the Johnson lead may be considerably lessened by returns from the country and village precincts outside of the city of Minneapolis. Republicans' leaders locally, confidently believed last night that these returns would cut down Johnson's majority very considerably.

From the early returns, 418 precincts throughout the state gave Jacobson 36,523 and Johnson 45,630, a majority for Johnson of 9,108. The same precincts four years ago gave Dunn 33,052, and Johnson 41,086, a majority for Johnson of 8,034.

A surprising thing was the fact that Governor Johnson run ahead of William H. Taft in Minneapolis. Taft getting 24,596 votes to Johnson's 25,115.

Another surprise was the big vote polled by William Jennings Bryan, 14,662, this being 9,394 votes more than Alton B. Parker got four years ago in his race for the presidency.

William H. Taft, for president, and John A. Johnson, for governor, ran neck and neck in many of the city precincts.

Governor Johnson polled 25,115 votes in Minneapolis yesterday, as compared with 22,055 of four years ago, when he defeated Dunn for governor, and Jacobson yesterday polled 15,524 votes, as compared with the 13,831 obtained by Dunn in 1904.

Republican victory swept Hennepin county yesterday and named a solid Republican ticket for county officers from auditor down to county commissioner.

Adoniram Corntop Discourses on Present-Day Extravagance.

"Yes, siree, Bill, times is changed since you an' me was doin' our courtin'," said Adoniram Corntop, with a note of sadness in his voice, to old Andy Clover, who had come over to "set a spell."

"When we was doin' our courtin', Andy, a gal thought she was bein' treated right harnsom if a feller bought her ten cents' wuth o' pep'mints once in awhile, an' if he tuk her to any doin's in town she didn't expect him to go down into his jeans to the tune of a dollar or two fer ice cream an' soda water an' candy at fo'ty cents a paound. My son Si tuk his duckeydoodle to the band concert in town yistiday an' there wa'n't a quarter left of a dollar bill he struck me fer time he got home. Beats all the way young folks throw the money away nowadays. I tell ye times is changed mightily since we was boys, an' the Lawd only knows what the end will be with a feller layin' out 75 cents on a gal in one day."—Puck.

LAME BACK PRESCRIPTION

The increased use of whiskey for lame back rheumatism is causing considerable discussion among the medical fraternity. It is an almost infallible cure when mixed with certain other ingredients and taken properly. The following formula is effective: "To one-half pint of good whiskey add one ounce of Toris Compound and one ounce Syrup Sarsaparilla Compound. Take in tablespoonful doses before each meal and before retiring."

Toris compound is a product of the laboratories of the Globe Pharmaceutical Co., Chicago, but it as well as the other ingredients can be had from any good druggist.

Revelations of the Breakfast Table.

To girls about to marry one would tender the advice that they study their intended victim at breakfast. If he is feeding like forty, reject him as the direct descendant of Circe's herd of swine. If he is melancholy, beware of the abrupt curves of his temperament. If he be boisterous and facetious, remember that an empty drum gives the greatest reverbration, and a chatterbox at 8 a. m. is as tiresome as Chanticleer at 3 o'clock in the morning. By their breakfasts you shall know them.—Saturday Review.

Unusually Severe Drought.

The water in Lake Champlain during the recent drought reached the lowest point recorded in local history, nine feet below high water mark. Steamers were obliged to abandon many of their trips on account of the impossibility of making landings at the docks. The mountain brooks became almost dry, and the beds of some of the largest rivers were mere threads of water. The drought and forest fires were ruinous to agricultural interests.—New York Sun.

I AM A MOTHER

How many American women in lonely homes to-day long for this blessing to come into their lives, and to be able to utter these words, but because of some organic derangement this happiness is denied them.

Every woman interested in this subject should know that preparation for healthy maternity is accomplished by the use of

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND

Mrs. Maggie Gilmer, of West Union, S. C., writes to Mrs. Pinkham: "I was greatly run-down in health from a weakness peculiar to my sex, when Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended to me. It not only restored me to perfect health, but to my delight I am a mother."

Mrs. Josephine Hall, of Bardstown, Ky., writes: "I was a very great sufferer from female troubles, and my physician failed to help me. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound not only restored me to perfect health, but I am now a proud mother."

FACTS FOR SICK WOMEN.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has positively cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness or nervous prostration. Why don't you try it?

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health. Address, Lynn, Mass.

KEPT GETTING WORSE.

Five Years of Awful Kidney Disease.

Nat Anderson, Greenwood, S. C., says: "Kidney trouble began about five years ago with dull backache, which got so severe in time that I could not get around. The kidney secretions became badly disordered, and at times there was almost a complete stop of the flow. I was examined again and again and treated to no avail, and kept getting worse. I have to praise Doan's Kidney Pills for my final relief and cure. Since using them I have gained in strength and flesh and have no sign of kidney trouble."

The Doctor's Fee.

The average man will give a lawyer $300 to $500, together with a lifetime's praise, to keep him out of the penitentiary for from two to ten years, and at the same time he will raise a phosphorescent glow and a kick that can be heard around the world if a doctor charges him $50 to $100 to keep him out of hell for a lifetime. We are the only people under God's ethereal tent to-day who keep open shop 24 hours each day and 365 days in each year. We are also the only laborers to keep on working for people who do not pay. I can carry my part of charity with as good a grace as most men. I can go through rain, snow or mud and do my best, provided the case is one of worthy need, but to reward continually downright rascality, willful drunkenness and wanton laziness is getting out of my line.—Texas State Journal of Medicine.

MODESTY.

Teacher (encouragingly) — Come, now, Willie, spell chickens.

Willie—I'm afraid I'm too young to spell chickens, teacher, but you might try me on eggs.

A Queer Harvest.

It was little Ethel's first visit to church, and the sermon had for its text, "As ye sow, so shall ye reap." But on her return home she could not remember it, and in consequence was chided by her mother for being stupid.

A fortnight later a seamstress came to the house to do a day's work. After watching her for awhile fashion old-style garments into those that were th evogue, Ethel suddenly exclaimed:

"O mamma, I know now what the preacher said. It was: 'What you sew in the winter you shall rip in the summer.'"

Not an Up-to-Date Church.

Two colored sisters living in a suburban town met on the street one day, and Sister Washington, who had recently joined the church, was describing her experiences.

"'Deed Mrs. Johnsing, I'se j'ined the Baptist church, but I couldn't do all the j'ining here, 'cause they had to take me to the city church to baptize me. You know there ain't no pool room in the church here."—Success.

The Good That Never Dies.

Dickens: There is nothing, innocent or good, that dies and is forgotten. Let us hold to that faith or none. An infant, a prattling child, will live again in the better thoughts of those who loved it, and will play its part, through them, in the redeeming actions of the world, though its body be burnt to ashes or drowned in the deepest sea.

PUZZLE SOLVED.

Coffee at Bottom of Trouble.

It takes some people a long time to find out that coffee is hurting them.

But when once the fact is clear, most people try to keep away from the thing which is followed by ever increasing detriment to the heart, stomach and nerves.

"Until two years ago I was a heavy coffee drinker," writes an Ill. stockman, "and had been all my life. I am now 56 years old.

"About three years ago I began to have nervous spells and could not sleep nights, was bothered by indigestion, bloating, and gas on stomach affected my heart.

"I spent lots of money doctoring—one doctor told me I had chronic catarrh of the stomach; another that I had heart disease and was liable to die at any time. They all dieted me until I was nearly starved but I seemed to get worse instead of better.

"Having heard of the good Postum had done for nervous people, I discarded coffee altogether and began to use Postum regularly. I soon got better, and now, after nearly two years, I can truthfully say I am sound and well.

"I sleep well at night, do not have the nervous spells and am not bothered with indigestion or palpitation. I weigh 32 pounds more than when I began Postum, and am better every way than I ever was while drinking coffee. I can't say too much in praise of Postum, as I am sure it saved my life." "There's a Reason."

TAFT AND SHERMAN WIN AT THE POLLS; HAVE 298 ELECTORS

Bryan Is Beaten for Third Time in Presidential Race.

MARYLAND IS DEMOCRATIC

That State Cuts Down the Republican Lead—Victory for Nebraskan in Own Territory.

Results in Other Parts of the Country—G. O. P. Is Successful in New York.

Chicago, Nov. 5.—William Howard Taft has been elected the twenty-seventh president of the United States and James Schoolcraft Sherman has been chosen vice-president. This is the outcome of one of the most remarkable political campaigns in the history of the republic. William Jennings Bryan went down in the third defeat of his life's ambition to occupy the White House.

Returns received here late Wednesday night indicated that Mr. Taft would have at least 298 electoral votes, and as the details came in increasing fullness from the west it began to look as if the figure might reach the 325 mark claimed in the ante-election forecast of Chairman Hitchcock of the Republican national committee, or possibly would approximate the 336 achieved in 1904 by Mr. Roosevelt. The number necessary to a choice is 242.

New York Result Surprises.

One of the results surpassing the most sanguine hopes of most Republicans was Mr. Taft's carrying the city of New York by a plurality of 15,645. His plurality in New York state will be approximately 189,334, exceeding by nearly 14,000 Roosevelt's record of 1904.

Only second in point of general interest was the victory of Gov. Charles E. Hughes, who was re-eelcted by a plurality estimated as more than 75,000 above the vote cast for his Democratic opponent, Lieut. Gov. Chanler. While Greater New York gave a plurality for Taft, it gave Chanler a margin of 56,843.

The result was so close in Maryland and West Virginia as to center attention upon those states. The latest returns indicate that Bryan carried both states by small pluralities.

Bryan Carries Nebraska.

Bryan won Nebraska, and that state has elected a Democratic governor. Although Taft carried Indiana, Ohio, and probably Montana, all three of these states seem to have chosen Democratic governors, Judge Harmon apparently winning in Ohio and Thomas R. Marshall in Indiana. On the other hand, while Bryan carried Missouri by a safe margin, the election of Herbert S. Hadley, the Republican candidate for governor, was indicated.

Among other significant results were the re-election to congress of Speaker Cannon and Chairman Sereno E. Payne of the house committee on ways and means and the probable election for a third term of Gov. Johnson in Minnesota, which state, nevertheless, returns a decisive plurality for Taft.

It became evident early that Thomas L. Hisgen, candidate of the Independence party, had received comparatively meager support, and that his vote would not affect the result materially. Little was learned as to the magnitude of the Socialist or Prohibition vote.

Bryan's Strength in Middle West.

Bryan's chief strength seems to have been in the middle west. There is a degree of truth in the saying in vogue here Tuesday night: "The east has elected a president." New England, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania rallied to Taft with notable majorities; the only eastern state about which there seemed doubt at the opening of Wednesday's tidings was Maryland, returns from which dwindled Taft's plurality as claimed from 5,000 to 800.

West Virginia also was in doubt, with the probabilities favoring Taft. Maryland and Nebraska, according to latest returns, have gone for Bryan. Colorado was in the doubtful column.

There Is Some Uncertainty.

The uncertainty Wednesday night may be summarized as follows:

Colorado—Returns very incomplete. The state is probably Democratic.

Idaho—Almost certainly for Taft. Legislature probably Republican.

Missouri—In doubt; claimed by both parties for president. For governor, Hadley (Rep.) is leading Cowherd (Dem.) by 15,000 on incomplete returns.

Maryland—In doubt, but probably for Bryan by about 1,000, with four counties incomplete.

Nevada—Probably for Bryan.

Ohio—Taft's plurality estimated at 50,000. Ex-Attorney General Harmon (Dem.) claimed to be elected governor, but Republicans dispute. Democratic gains in legislature.

PRESIDENTIAL PLURALITIES

The following table shows the electoral vote in the presidential elections and the pluralities by states:

| State. | Electoral vote. Taft. | Electoral vote. Bryan. | Pluralities. Taft. | Pluralities. Bryan. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Alabama | | 11 | | 50,000 |
| Arkansas | | 9 | | 20,000 |
| California | 10 | | 45,000 | |

| West Virginia | 7 | | 30,000 | |
| Wisconsin | 13 | | 80,000 | |
| Wyoming | 3 | | 10,000 | |
| Total | 298 | 185 | 1,723,422 | 458,904 |
| Majority | 121 | | 1,265,428 | |

In West Virginia.

West Virginia—Latest returns favor Taft. Bennett (Dem.), for governor, is in the lead, but the Republicans claim all five congressmen, admitting only two districts in doubt.

The pluralities of Taft and Hughes in New York state were somewhat modified by returns received late Wednesday, though the result was not materially changed. With 80 out of 4,669 districts missing, and two estimated, late Wednesday Taft's plurality had been raised to 199,585, an increase of about 2,000 from the earlier estimate, and with 97 districts missing and 35 estimated, Hughes' plurality for governor had been reduced to 69,819.

Complete Massachusetts Vote.

Boston, Nov. 5.—The complete vote of Massachusetts for president was: Taft, 250,221; Bryan, 165,860. Taft's plurality, 84,361. For governor: Draper, Republican, 233,874; Vahey, Democrat, 173,335. Draper's plurality, 60,539.

Maryland for Bryan by 1,000.

Baltimore, Md., Nov. 5.—The latest returns from the election indicate that Bryan carried Maryland by about 1,000 plurality, the totals being: Bryan, 101,402; Taft, 100,339. Four counties (St. Mary's, Calvert, Dorchester and Frederick) were incomplete, but in each county only a few precincts remained to be heard from. The reports gave the state to Taft by a plurality of 163, but as the day wore on more complete returns showed a steady Democratic gain, which soon wiped out the slight Republican lead and apparently has put the state into the Bryan column.

Struggle in Missouri Close.

St. Louis, Nov. 5.—Incomplete returns from 50 counties in Missouri show that Taft is leading Bryan by about 1,000. In St. Louis 246 of 403 precincts give Taft 41,084; Bryan, 35,336. Incomplete returns from 86 counties and the city of St. Louis give for governor—Hadley (Rep.), 130,029; Cowherd (Dem.), 114,439. Sixty-two counties and St. Louis, incomplete, give for United States senator—Stone, 47,600; Folk, 39,312.

Taft Is Joyous.

Cincinnati, Nov. 5.—"I believe I was elected by the business men of the country, Democrats as well as Republicans; that I received my share of the labor, and that the farmers generally stood by me. I am much gratified." William H. Taft was sitting in the library of his temporary home, the C. P. Taft residence, Wednesday, when he gave expression to the above declaration. Going more into detail as to the returns, he added: "In my own state and Indiana, the result was very much affected by the local liquor questions, and it is very difficult to figure out just how it operated. The sweeping victory in New York, Massachusetts, New Jersey and Connecticut is especially gratifying to me."

How Roosevelt Took It.

Washington, Nov. 5.—President Roosevelt Wednesday gave his interpretation of the victory of the Republican party at the polls when he said to the newspaper men whom he received in his office:

"This administration has meant a steady effort and progress which should never be allowed to deviate into an unwise radicalism on the one hand nor into an unwise conservatism on the other. The nomination of Mr. Taft was a triumph over reactionary conservatism, and his election was a triumph over unwise and improper radicalism."

Major Kills Saloon Keeper.

Chaffee, Mo., Nov. 5.—Maj. Henry Burnett, 60 years old, of Osceola, Ark., Wednesday shot A. B. Chaney, a saloon keeper here. The encounter took place on the main street. Chaney killed Burnett's son September 1, and was under indictment. Burnett was arrested.

BUSINESS MANAGER FOR CHURCH

Cleveland Institution Plans to Try a New System.

The Epworth Memorial Methodist church in Cleveland has decided to try a new system of church management. A business manager has been appointed who will give his entire time and attention to the finances of the church. As executive secretary he will collect the benevolences, dues of members, subscriptions, etc., and pay all expenses. He will serve as secretary of the standing committees of the church and keep a record of their business for transmission to the official board. This, it is expected, will leave the pastor free to give attention to the larger plans of the work and to his pulpit and pastoral duties. Epworth Memorial has the largest membership of all the Protestant churches in the city. It has an extensive charity work and handles over $35,000 in contributions every year. Dr. G. K. Morris, district superintendent, strongly commends the innovation. "To my mind," he says, "it is the ideal of church government. I expect to see the plan adopted in many other cities."

LIVED ON TEN CENTS A WEEK.

Bill Doolittle's System a Good One, But Not Attractive.

"D'y'u find smoking hurts y'u?" asks Hi Biddle, a Yankee lawyer, in Willie Brook's story, "The Solar Machine," in Harper's.

"It probably doesn't do me any good," I said; "but I'd have trouble quitting it."

"No, y'u wouldn't. Smoke this." He took from his vest pocket the fellow to the stogey in his mouth and tossed it across the table to me. "Ever hear how Bill Doolittle lived on ten cents a week?"

I confessed that Bill's economies had never been brought to my attention.

"Wal," said Biddle, "he took dinner with a friend on Sunday, an' ate enough to last 'im till Wednesday. Then he bought ten cents' wuth o' tripe, an' he hated tripe so like thunder that it lasted 'im the rest o' the week. These seegars work a good deol like that tripe. You take to smokin' 'em, an' y'u won't want more'n one or two a day."

15 YEARS OF SUFFERING.

Burning, Painful Sores on Legs—Tortured Day and Night—Tried Many Remedies to No Avail—Cured by Cuticura.

"After an attack of rheumatism, running sores broke out on my husband's legs, from below the knees to the ankles. There are no words to tell all the discomforts and great suffering he had to endure night and day. He used every kind of remedy and three physicians treated him, one after the other, without any good results whatever. One day I ordered some Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment, and Cuticura Resolvent. He began to use them and in three weeks all the sores were died up. The burning fire stopped, and the pains became bearable. After three months he was quite well. I can prove this testimonial at any time. Mrs. V. V. Albert, Upper Frenchville, Me., July 21. 1907."

Well Prepared.

"I learn," she said reproachfully, "that you were devoted to no fewer than five girls before you finally proposed to me. How do I know that you didn't make desperate love to all of them?"

"I did," he replied, promptly.

"You did!" she exclaimed.

"Certainly," he returned. "You don't suppose for a moment that I would be foolhardy enough to try for such a prize as you are without practicing a little first, do you?"

A Difficult Task.

An old Irish laborer walked into the luxurious studio of a New York artist and asked for money to obtain a meal, as he was too weak to work.

The artist gave him a quarter and then, seeing possibilities for a sketch in the queer old fellow, said: "I'll give you a dollar if you'll let me paint you."

"Sure," said the man, "it's an easy way to make a dollar, but, but—I'm wonderin' how I'd get it off."

$100 Reward, $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. ### A Cure.

The sinner walked along the rocky road, his bare feet torn and bleeding from bruises and wounds. He met a stranger.

"Friend," he exclaimed, "I have sinned and done wrong, I must patiently suffer the most extreme agony to save myself from eternal damnation. Can you tell me some supreme test of repentance?"

"Certainly," answered the other, with an air of experience. "Go to a boarding house and live there for a year."

Taft is elected president and the business prosperity of the country will proceed without a hitch.

Now that the campaign is over it will be a good plan to bury the political differences and everybody attend to business on a friendly footing.

The Northwestern Printer, a newspaper magazine published at St. Paul, in its last issue contains the following comment on Plummer:

The Plummer PIONEER is now four years old, and starts off on the fifth year as clipper as tho it was receiving somewhere near the patronage it deserves, while in fact its advertising columns are almost vacant so far as Plummer business houses are concerned. We do not understand why Bro. Latta continues to waste his time and talent in a community which shows so little appreciation of the good work he is doing for its upbuilding. However that's his business, and if he wishes to continue to "cast pearls before the swine," it is his privilege to do so.

We dont quite agree with the inuendo conveyed in this item. All the business men of Plummer are not bristle backs and as for the country district in which we do business we have found it the best ever from a newspapers man's viewpoint. Even Sodom and Gomorrah were not condemmed while there was a chance to find even a few men good men in them, while in this vicinity the wicked are a hopeless minority.

HUNTING WILD HORSES.

How Brumbies In New South Wales Are Trapped and Broken.

Hunting "brumbies," as the wild horses are called there, is a favorite sport in New South Wales. Districts like the Clarence and Stephens and Manning river watershed are still the home of numerous droves of brumbies, and hunting them is declared to be a very exhilarating pastime. The first step taken is to stake out a corral and make all secure except a narrow entrance, which can subsequently be gated. On either side of the entrance and projecting from it funnelwise a "booby fence" is prepared.

To the simple minded brumby it presumably looks like a stockade, and pieces of fluttering cotton make it look impregnable. When this is ready, the young bloods, well mounted, gallop out and round up the wild horses, driving them with shouts and much loud snapping of stock whips toward the mouth of the funnel.

In a group of brumbies there is always a leader, and when once the hunters have got the leader heading for the corral they are pretty certain of the rest of the drove. The fluttering cotton rags of the sham fence are sufficent to deter the brumbies from breaking through the flimsy barriers, and in less time than it takes to tell the wild horses are safely corralled and the big gate shut on them.

Then they are left for four and twenty hours without food and water to reflect on the situation, and after that they can be broken in without much difficulty.—London Standard.

Marlin

For shooting the swift flying, heavily feathered ducks and geese the Marlin 12-gauge repeating shotgun has no superior. This gun is exceedingly strong in construction and yet is not heavy. It is bored to throw an excellent pattern with great penetration. The solid top keeps out the weather and the brush and twigs of the blind, and the side ejector prevents the empty shells from being a nuisance to the shooter. It's the best bad weather gun.

The Marlin 12-gauge is suited to all forms of bird and trap shooting, and for durability, strength and ease of action is unexcelled. Made for both black and smokeless powders and for heavy loads. Two separate extractors make sure work.

In District Court.

The October term of court for this county convened at Red Lake Falls on Wednesday with Judge Wm. Watts presiding. There was very little for the grand jury to attend to and the petit jury seemed to be unable to get busy as the civil cases were settled about as fast as they were called on the calendar. Consequently Judge Watts ordered an adjournment until Monday next when the trial of cases will be taken up and will probably occupy about a week.

The grand jury, before adjourning on Wednesday brought in the following report:

State of Minnesota } ss county of Red Lake }

We the Grand Jury of said County, hereby report that we have investigated into the condition of the County Buildings, the Court House and Jail, and hereby report that we found said property in a fair condition.

Dated November 11th 1908.
CHARLES GUSTAFSON.
Foreman of the Grand Jury

Doctor Arrested.

Thief River Falls had quite a sensation on Tuesday afternoon when Dr. Gronerud, of Bronson, was arrested for performing a criminal operation upon one Minnie Sjogren, a 17-year old girl from Bronson. The operation was performed in a room over the Hub restaurant on Sunday evening and was discovered by the landlady who promptly reported the matter to the police. The docter was arrested as stated and the girl has returned home to Bronson. Dr. Gronerud was taken to Red Falls for trial at this term of the distaict court.

More Railroad Rumors.

Up at Thief River Falls a rumor is current to the effect that the Duluth, South Shore and Atlantic railway will commence next spring to construct a new line of railroad between Thief River Falls and Duluth. According to the News the plan is to build this new line to branch off from the Soo line a short distance south of Thief River Falls and run southeast crossing the Great Northern at Bemidji and from there through some iron mining country to connect with the new line now being built batwean Brooten and Duluth by the Soo people.

E. B. Lanager transacted business at Thief River Falls last Saturday. On his return he was accompanied by his father who remained here for a short visit.

Watch out for the big auction sale bills that will be out next week with the list of property to be sold at the Mayfield farm in section 1, of Wyandotte township, on the 25th inst.

Drop Siding, Flooring or any kind of fine finished lumber can now be had at the S. P. K. Lumber, Cedar & Tie Co's mill yard in Plummer. You dont have to pay trust prices if you buy your lumber from this company.

Emil Olson will deliver an address at the Plummer schoolhouse on next Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock, and at the Emardville church on Thursday afternoon, the 19th. inst at 2 o'clock. Mr. Olson will speak in the Scandinavian language and his subjects will be temperance and county option. Admission will be free and all are invited to attend the meetings.

The Clearwater Ladies Aid will hold their annual auction sale on Thursday next at the Rice farm, in section 22, of Wyandotte township. The sale will be started at 10;30 A. M. and a lunch will be served at noon. The proceeds of this sale will be devoted to improving the interior of the Wyandotte church. Everybody is invited to attend.

Sales Agents Wanted.

Experience unnecessary. We instruct you how to sell our googs and furnish the capitol. If you want a permanent, honorable, profitable position, write us today for particulars, catalogue and samples.

FRANK W. WILLIAMS Company,
1214 W. Taylor St., Chicago.

Kolseth Re-Captured.

Robert Kolseth, the young man who escaped from the county jail at Red Lake Falls some time ago, was again arrested on Tuesday of this week at Crookston. At the time of his escape he was being held in the county jail to await the action of the grand jury on a charge of stealing a team of horses from his uncle, Hans R. Kolseth, of Wyandotte township. When he took the team he drove the horses to Euclid in Polk county, and sold them for $100 to LePalm and McKinney, a firm of ditching contractors. He was arrested a few days later at Thief River Falls and bound over to the grand jury.

When he made his escape from the jail he succeeded in making his way to Canada where he remained until this week. He returned to Crookston and while under the influence of liquor made some boasting remarks. Contractor McKinney happened to be in the vicinity and he promptly captured Kolseth and turned him over to the police. He was brought back to Red Lake Falls for trial and it is probable that he will have to do time in the penitentiary.

Too Much For Him.

"How true that old saying is about a child asking questions that a man cannot answer," remarked Popleigh.

"What's the trouble now?" queried his friend Singleton.

"This morning," replied Popleigh. "my little boy asked me why men were sent to congress, and I couldn't tell him."—Chicago News.

Did He?

"You never saw a man who understood women."

"Well, I knew a man once who claimed that he did."

"And did he?"

"Well, he never married one."—Houston Post

Her Chin.

Dawson—The facial features plainly indicate character and disposition. In selecting your wife, were you governed by her chin? Spenlow—No, but I have been ever since we married.

Her Ears In Danger.

Susie had left her toys about the kitchen. Mother (picking them up)—Susie, if you leave these things about the kitchen again I'll box your ears and throw them in the ash pit.

None but the contemptible are apprehensive of contempt.—Rochefoucauld.

OCEAN LINER'S CARGO.

Four Hundred Husky Longshoremen to Load One Ship.

Down on the wharf the rush was at its height. Under the sputtering bluish arc lights, amid endless clang and rumble, the produce of America came in. From the prairies, the mines and the mills, from the forests, the cotton plantations, tobacco fields, orchards and vineyards, from the oil fields and meat packing houses, from the grimy factories, large and small, ponderous engines of steel, harvesters, reapers, automobiles, bars of silver and yellow bricks of gold, bales of cotton and wool and hides and tobacco, meats, barrels of flour and boxes of fruit, hogshead of oil and casks of wine—tens of thousands of things and machines to make things—piled up on the wharf by the acre. And still all night the teams clattered in and the tugs puffed up with the barges, and from hundreds of miles away the trains were rushing hither, bringing more boxes and barrels and bags to be packed in at the last moment.

In gangs at every hatchway the 400 men were trundling, heaving, straining, a rough crowd, cursing and joking at the hoarse shouts of the foremen, while from the darkness outside heavy black rope nets dropped down to gather gigantic handfuls of cargo, swing them back up to the deck of the ship and then down into her hold. So all through the night and right up to the hour of sailing the rush went on, for the great ocean liner's work is worth hundreds of thousands of dollars a month. And the ship must sail on time.—Everybody's.

Pleasant For the Bride.

At the close of a wedding breakfast a gentleman noted for his blunders rose to his feet, causing keen anxiety to all who knew him. "Ladies and gentlemen," he cried genially, "I drink to the health of the bridegroom. May he see many days like this!"

Poor Board.

"I see," said Mrs. Starvem, "that a certain scientist claims we'll soon get a palatable food from wood"—

"Well," growled the cranky boarder, "it seems impossible to get it out of board."—Philadelphia Press.

It is a brief period of life that is granted us by nature, but the memory of a well spent life never dies.—Cicero.

FAKE PAINTINGS.

The tricks of the picture dealer?

They are not to be counted. Here is one that was played quite recently. A dealer ordered from an artist a tavern scene in the old Dutch style signed in the corner with a facsimile of Jan Steen's signature. When the smoky look of age had been given it the dealer eyed it with approval.

"Splendid!" he said to the needy artist. "It's a pity you shouldn't have the credit of it. Pray sign it with your own name. It may make your reputation."

The poor artist, delighted, painted over the signature of Jan Steen and set his own name there. Three weeks later the picture started for New York, consigned to a Fifth avenue merchant of paintings. But by the same boat went an anonymous letter to the custom house officials warning them that an attempt was being made to smuggle in a chef d'oeuvre of the Dutch school worth $40,000. The picture was seized. Experts were called in. They scraped off the signature of the artist and found underneath that of Jan Steen. The importer had to pay a fine of 50 per cent—that is, $20,000—and in addition $8,000 duty. Three days later, however, he sold his Jan Steen (guaranteed by the United States government) for the round sum of $70,000. Thus he made a fair profit, for the original cost of the picture was $14—70 francs paid to the poor devil of an artist.—Broadway Magazine.

A Model Hotel "Boots."

It was in a Dublin hotel, and as I closed the bedroom door, says a writer in the Manchester Guardian, I noticed that the end of one of my boot laces was inside the room, the boot to which it was attached having been placed as usual outside. When I awoke next morning the boot lace end was still there, and I opened the door expecting to find that the boots had not been cleaned, but I was wrong. A very careful hotel servant, a very model among "boots," had found the lace tightly gripped by the door and rather than disturb me had carefully removed it from the lace holes and carried away the boot. Presently I heard a quiet noise outside the door. The model boots had brought my boots back again and was industriously relacing that one which he had unlaced.

BOMB SHAKES UP CHICAGO

EXPLOSION WRECKS BUILDINGS AND MAKES GAP IN CITY GAS MAINS.

The People Are Panic Stricken. Missive is Believed to Have Been Intended for a Clothing Merchant Named Ettelson.

Chicago, Nov. 12.—A bomb explosion early yesterday partially wrecked a number of buildings, hurled people from their beds, caused a panic among the passengers in the Chicago & North-Western depot, tore down a trolley wire, wrecked gas mains and endangered the lives of hundreds.

The bomb was exploded in front of a clothing store owned by Isaac Ettelson on the northeast corner of Wells and Kinzie streets.

It was the worst of bomb explosions which at intervals for more than a year have terrorized sections of Chicago. More than $40,000 damage resulted.

The explosion shook the North-Western depot so that the big clock in the tower stopped. People walking along the street were knocked down and great excitement resulted when trolley cars on the Wells street line stopped.

The breaking of the gas mains caused the air to become filled with poisonous gases. Guests in the Hotel North, the Kinzie and other hotels were greatly frightened as they were tumbled out of their beds.

Dwelling houses in the neighborhood were filled by gas, which overpowered the residents, who were saved by policemen and firemen. The motive for the explosion is not known, but the police are hunting for two men who were seen loitering around the building shortly before the explosion and were also seen running away. Scores of detectives are working on the case.

LAUNCHED.

The Big Battleship North Dakota Takes the Waves.

Quincy, Mass., Nov. 11.—More than 10,000 persons, including representatives of two states and of the national government, gathered at the yards of the Fore River Shipbuilding company yesterday to witness the launching of America's most powerful sea fighter, the North Dakota.

While the North Dakota follows nearly a dozen great vessels launched at the Fore River yards, her advent into the sea was regarded as establishing a new epoch in the history of the United States navy.

The christening party came from North Dakota, including Governor John Burke and Miss Mary Benton, together with several officials and many women.

Arrangements for seeing the launching were ample, there being many vantage points about the yard, and along the sides of the river, which is quite narrow. The guests of the yard came out to Quincy from Boston on poker rooms to close.

FREDERIC ON FIRE.

The Little Town in Wisconsin Is About Wiped Out.

Frederic, Wis., Nov. 10.—Fire starting in the Frederic hotel at 4 a. m. yesterday has swept through Frederic and threatens to compleetly wipe out the town. At 10 a. m. today $100,000 worth of property has been wiped out, and, with no water supply and but the slightest means of fighting the flames.

Among the buildings already destroyed are: Payne's hotel and saloon, the Frederic hotel, Luke's restaurant, Diamond Brothers' barber shop, Lunon & Taylor's meat market, Coddon's clothing store, Hedberg's grocery and hardware store, Carlson's hardware and furniture store, Olson & Son's general store and Hubbard's saloon. A part of the loss is covered by insurance.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Gored by Bull.

St. Charles.—Lying on a cot in the general hospital at Winona, the surgeons working heroically to stop the flow of blood from gaping wounds in her thigh and hip, Mrs. Thomas Griffith of Homer, Winona county, is the survivor of the most frightful experience that has ever befallen a resident of this vicinity.

Mrs. Griffith, who is the wife of a well-to-do farmer, was crossing a pasture accompanied by a small dog, when a bull which had never before displayed any dangerous tendencies stopped right in her path.

The dog barked and the bull charged at him full tilt. The dog quickly swerving to one side, however, the engraged beast turned upon Mrs. Griffith, and before the unfortunate woman had an opportunity to get out of his way, struck her full on the side with both horns, bearing her down and tearing frightful wounds through her thigh and hip.

Boy Drowned.

Eveleth.—William Rosila, a ten-year-old boy, fell through the ice while playing on the Fayal mine pond. John Benson, a workman, tried to save him, but both were drowned. Joe Muhick, sixteen years old, who with Benson attempted to rescue the lad, had a very narrow escape.

It was the old story of venturing on the ice too early. Owing to the low temperature of the past few weeks a thin, sheet of ice has formed on all small bodies of water. On the Fayal pond it was quite extensive and tempted the boy. He was walking and sliding when the ice gave way and he fell through.

Boy Murderer.

Brainerd.—John Bushaway, Jr., the 10-year-old son of John Bushaway of West Brainerd, was instantly killed by Ralph Murray, the 11-year-old son of a neighbor.

The boys had quarreled and young Murray and a companion went to the house and got a rifle and loaded it, Murray then shooting Bushaway in the throat, killing him instantly. The only witness to the crime was Frank Bushaway, an 8-year-old brother of the victim.

The two Bushaway boys were piling brush across the street from the Murray home when the tragedy occurred.

Girl Shot in Play.

Hibbing.—Edna Geary, 12 years old, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Geary, was accidentally shot and killed while rehearsing with other children in an amateur play.

She was the "villianess" and Russell Barrett, aged 12, was the "hero."

While reciting the lines of the play, young Barret aimed a gun, not supposed to be loaded, at the girl, and pulled the trigger. The little one fell dead.

The tragedy occurred at the home of W. C. Barrett, father of the boy, a livery man.

The play had progressed to the point where the villianess stole the "valuable papers."

Julius Is First.

St. Paul.—Julius A. Schmahl, secretary of state, set a good example to other state candidates by being the first to file an election expense account. He did not have to go far as the law prescribes that the accounts shall be filed in his office.

Mr. Schmahl states that he spent $834.75. Of this sum, $500 went to the republican state central committee; $50 to the Redwood county republican club; $50 for a filing fee, and the balance for railraod fare, hotel bills and incidentals.

May Be Adopted.

Minneapolis.—If ten counties are an indication of what the other seventy-five have done, the constitutional amendment providing for educational qualifications for county superintendents of schools is the only one of the four submitted at the last election that passed, although the good roads amendment came quite close to getting the necessary majority of the votes cast.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

Minneapolis.—Probably the most important offering which the Bijou Opera House in Minneapolis will present to the theatre-going public this season, is the famous musical comedy extravaganza, "Wine, Women and Song," which will be seen at that play house the week of November 15th., with Bonita as its star. This attraction went into New York for a limited engagement of four weeks at the New Circle Theatre. All New York was talking of her unique entertainment, and on Wednesday of the first week, the attraction to follow was cancelled, and Bonita's company remained at the theatre for over eight months.

Minneapolis.—Frank Shercliffe, notorious desperado, is in Hennepin county jail after eventful flight from authorities of many states; makes desperate struggles to escape.

Minneapolis.—E. C. Beauvier, a switchman, is charged with illegally securing three pairs of hose for a friend; implicates railroad employes in organized thievery.

Washington.—Jacob G. Schroeder has been appointed regular carrier for Mountain Lake, Minn., and William F Schroeder is named as substitute.

OLDEST MAN IN NAVY

BILL MACABEE SAW BATTLES OF THE WAR OF 1812.

Began Career in Uncle Sam's Service 94 Years Ago and Recently Celebrated His 105th Birthday—Still Healthy Old Fellow.

Philadelphia.—Older in strvice than any man in the United States, older in years than any veteran in the service of Uncle Sam, binding with his own life the earliest stage of national existence with the present, William Macabee has just celebrated his one hundred and fifth birthday.

The old fellow is now living at the Naval home, in this city, and has been there for 34 years. The celebration of his natal day was the occasion for a birthday party, at which he was the guest of Admiral Miller, and many noted officers called to pay their respects.

Bill's career in the navy began in 1814, so that he has been connected with Uncle Sam for 94 years.

The marvelous record of this old fellow will perhaps never be surpassed in United States naval records. At the present time he has gone ahead of all his predecessors, and as he is still a healthy old fellow there is every possibility that he will be on hand for some time yet to tell his experiences.

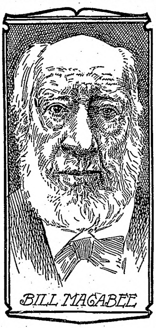
Bill's favorite way of beginning the recital is to tell how, when he was a boy ten years old, he shied stones at the soldiers of Great Britain in 1813.



He lived in Baltimore then, and his father owned a mill at Jones Falls. When the soldiers of George III. marched through the city he stood on the bridge and threw rocks and oyster shells at them. This was the first actual service Bill did for his country, and he tells with pride that nearly every missile he threw hit the mark.

This began a career that is the marvel of officers.

When the magnificent armored cruiser Pennsylvania was launched a few years ago, the fact was recalled by officials of the naval home that Macabee's career was curiously bound up with that of the new monster just being inducted into the service of the nation.

Macabee was boatswain's mate on the old Pennsylvania. At Norfolk navy yard he gave the word to the crew leaving the ship, just before she was burned to prevent her from falling into the hands of the confederacy. Later in the day he led the crew in yelling in defiance to the demand from the Merrimac to surrender after the confederate ironclad had riddled the Congress to the sinking point in the battle of Hampton Roads. Macabee had been shifted to the Congress after it became necessary to leave the Pennsylvania.

Before giving up the Pennsylvania, the crew made a noble effort to save her. But finding that of no avail, she was fastened to the Pawnee, towed out into the stream and set afire.

Among the other ships on which the old fellow has seen service are the Delaware, United States, Ohio, Stark, Connecticut, Vixen, Vandalia, Wabash, Yorktown and Waterwitch.

Macabee's home was not far from that of Francis Scott Key, who wrote "The Star Spangled Banner." Though only a youngster at the time the national anthem was penned, Macabee remembers well how quickly the air seized the affections of the people, and was heard on all sides.

"Honors" Bought for Cash.

Edward Cecil Guinness of the Irish firm of brewers was made a baronet in recognition of his gift of $1,250,000 for the rebuilding of the slums of Dublin. The work occupied six years and when successfully accomplished King Edward raised the baronet to the peerage with the title of Baron Iveagh After the king visited Ireland last year Lord Iveagh presented $250,000 to the Irish hospitals in commemoration of the sovereign's visit and in return he was made a viscount.

EXCELLENT WEATHER AND MAGNIFICENT CROPS

REPORTS FROM WESTERN CANADA ARE VERY ENCOURAGING.

A correspondent writes the Winnipeg (Man.) Free Press: "The Pincher Creek district, (Southern Alberta), the original home of fall wheat, where it has been grown without failure, dry seasons and wet, for about 25 years, is excelling itself this year. The yield and quality are both phenomenal, as has been the weather for its harvesting. Forty bushels is a common yield, and many fields go up to 50, 60 and over, and most of it No. 1 Northern. Even last year, which was less favorable, similar yields were in some cases obtained, but owing to the season the quality was not so good. It is probably safe to say that the average yield from the Old Man's River to the boundary will be 47 or 48 bushels per acre, and mostly No. 1 Northern. One man has just made a net profit from his crop of $19.55 per acre, or little less than the selling price of land. Land here is too cheap at present, when a crop or two will pay for it, and a failure almost unknown. Nor is the district dependent on wheat, all other crops do well, also stock and dairying, and there is a large market at the doors in the mining towns up the Crows Nest Pass, and in British Columbia, for the abundant hay of the district, and poultry, pork, and garden truck. Coal is near and cheap. Jim Hill has an eye on its advantages, and has invested here, and is bringing the Great Northern Railroad soon, when other lines will follow."

The wheat, oat and barley crop in other parts of Western Canada show splendid yields and will make the farmers of that country (and many of them are Americans) rich. The Canadian Government Agent for this district advises us that he will be pleased to give information to all who desire it about the new land regulations by which a settler may now secure 160 acres in addition to his 160 homestead acres, at $3.00 an acre, and also how to reach these lands into which railways are being extended. It might be interesting to read what is said of that country by the Editor of the Marshall (Minn.) News-Messenger, who made a trip through portions of it in July, 1908. "Passing through more than three thousand miles of Western Canada's agricultural lands, touring the northern and southern farming belts of the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, with numerous drives through the great grain fields, we were made to realize not only the magnificence of the crops, but the magnitude, in measures, of the vast territory opening, and to be opened to farming immigration. There are hundreds of thousands of farmers there, and millions of acres under cultivation, but there is room for millions more, and other millions of acreage available. We could see in Western Canada in soil, product, topography or climate, little that is different from Minnesota, and with meeting at every point many business men and farmers who went there from this state, it was difficult to realize one was beyond the boundary of the country."

Would Risk One More Bottle.

A Frenchman from the provinces who was paying a prolonged visit to Paris found his hair was leaving him at the top of his head, and took his barber to task about it. "You sold me two bottles of stuff to make the hair grow." "It is very strange it won't grow again," said the modern Figaro; "I can't understand it." "Look here!" said the countryman. "I don't mind drinking another bottle, but this must be the last!"—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Nothing I Ate Agreed With Me.

MRS. LENORA BODENHAMER.

Mrs. Lenora Bodenhamer, R. F. D. 1, Box 99, Kernersville, N. C., writes:

"I suffered with stomach trouble and indigestion for some time, and nothing that I ate agreed with me. I was very nervous and experienced a continual feeling of uneasiness and fear. I took medicine from the doctor, but it did me no good.

"I found in one of your Peruna books a description of my symptoms. I then wrote to Dr. Hartman for advice. He said I had catarrh of the stomach. I took Peruna and Manalin and followed his directions and can now say that I feel as well as I ever did.

"I hope that all who are afflicted with the same symptoms will take Peruna, as it has certainly cured me."

The above is only one of hundreds who have written similar letters to Dr. Hartman. Just one such case as this entitles Peruna to the candid consideration of every one similarly afflicted. If this be true of the testimony of one person what ought to be the testimony of hundreds, yes thousands, of honest, sincere people. We have in our files a great many other testimonials.

Uncle Zeb's Preference.

Uncle Zebulon was on a visit to his nephew in the big city and the two had gone to a restaurant for dinner. They had given their order and were waiting for it to be filled when the younger man, who had been glancing at a paper that lay on the table, said: said:

"By the way, uncle, did you ever have cerebro-spinal meningitis?"

"No," replied Uncle Zebulon, after a few moments' mental struggle with the question, "and I don't want any. I'd ruther have fried liver and bacon any day."

Nuts.

One very great advantage which nuts possess over most foods is their absolute freedom from adulteration. When you buy nuts, you always know what you are getting. Of course, those bought in the shell are also absolutely clean. And what a beautiful source they come from! How delightful to picture the trees upon which they grow, on the outermost branches dancing in the sunbeams.—Good Health.

By the Hurricane Route.

"He's long wanted to leave the country," says a Billville exchange, "but he never could afford the railroad fare, but just as he had given up all hope a hurricane came along and gave him and his house free transportation. It was providential and he pulled through at last."—Atlanta Constitution.

EAGER TO WORK

Health Regained by Right Food.

The average healthy man or woman is usually eager to be busy at some useful task or employment.

But let dyspepsia or indigestion get hold of one, and all endeavor becomes a burden.

"A year ago, after recovering from an operation," writes a Mich. lady, "my stomach and nerves began to give me much trouble.

"At times my appetite was voracious, but when indulged, indigestion followed. Other times I had no appetite whatever. The food I took did not nourish me, and I grew weaker than ever.

"I lost interest in everything, and wanted to be alone. I had always had good nerves, but now the merest trifle would upset me and bring on a violent headache. Walking across the room was an effort and prescribed exercise was out of the question.

"I had seen Grape-Nuts advertised, but did not believe what I read, at the time. At last when it seemed as if I were literally starving, I began to eat Grape-Nuts.

"I had not been able to work for a year, but now after two months on Grape-Nuts I am eager to be at work again. My stomach gives me no trouble now, my nerves are steady as ever, and interest in life and ambition have came back with the return to health."

"There's a Reason."

MIND OVER MATTER

By DON MARK LEMON

(Copyright, by Shortstory Pub. Co.)

"Why don't you go to the dentist and have the tooth attended to?"

John Fisher held his hand to his mouth and groaned.

"That's just like a man!" exclaimed John Fisher's mother-in-law. "Rather have the toothache than go to the dentist."

Still John Fisher said nothing. When one has a bad case of toothache even talk isn't cheap.

"Pooh! don't make such a long face about it. Besides, a toothache is all in the mind."

John Fisher glared.

"All in the mind," reaffirmed the lady, calmly and exasperatingly.

John Fisher arose to his feet. "Madam," he demanded, "do you mean to stand there and tell me that this raging toothache is all in my mind?"

"I do."

"And that if I only imagined it didn't hurt, it wouldn't hurt?"

"Exactly."

This was adding contempt to insult, and John Fisher said as much.

"Now, now, keep your temper, John!" cautioned the lady. "You know very well that if you hadn't any mind at all you couldn't be conscious of having the toothache. So if you will but withdraw your mind from the pain, it will be the same thing. You will be unconscious of it."

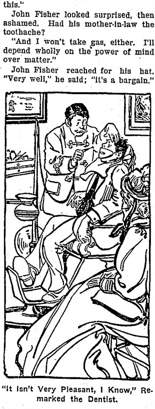
John Fisher sat down in disgust.

"I'll tell you what I will do," continued the resourceful mother-in-law. "If you will go with me to the dentist and have that tooth attended to I will have two of mine pulled and the nerves killed in four others. I should have had them attended to before this."

John Fisher looked surprised, then ashamed. Had his mother-in-law the toothache?

"And I won't take gas, either. I'll depend wholly on the power of mind over matter."

John Fisher reached for his hat. "Very well," he said; "it's a bargain."



"It Isn't Very Pleasant, I Know," Remarked the Dentist.

He smiled grimly. Two hours or so on the torturous dental chair would make his mother-in-law change her opinion about pain being all in the mind.

The lady also smiled, but her smile was all sweetness and guilelessness.

The dentist lowered the dental chair to accommodate his patient's height, and, after spreading a nice fresh towel over John Fisher's shoulder, filled his mouth with a sheet of rubber to keep him quiet and began his several acts of torture.

With a screw-wedge device he pried John Fisher's decayed and aching eyetooth from against its neighbor, screwing the wedge tighter and tighter; then, with a sharp, crooked pick he busied himself for awhile cutting and gouging into the aching tooth. This done, he sorted over his drills, calmly proceeded to sharpen the cruelest-looking one that he could find, placed the same in the dental engine, put his foot to the power and began to bore for the nerve.

It was agony, and John Fisher's body grew cold and hot by turns, and he began to squirm in his chair and groan aloud.

"It isn't very pleasant, I know," remarked the dentist.

With a shiver John Fisher looked crosswise into the attentive eyes of his mother-inlaw.

"Now, John," said that lady, "remember that pain is all in the mind, and if you will only imagine it doesn't hurt—why, it won't."

"O-o-oh!"

"What did I say? All in the mind!"

"O-o-o-oh!"

"Remember! all in—"

"Oh!"

John Fisher had endured all that flesh and blood could bear. He brought up his hand and with one jerk tore the wedge from between his teeth and the rubber from his mouth.

"Mr. Fisher!" expostulated the dentist.

"Why, John!" exclaimed the mother-in-law. "Didn't you hear me saying that pain is all in the mind?"

John Fisher turned upon the lady. "Madam, while I am letting this tooth cool, just have those two teeth of yours yanked out."

"Why, certainly." Mrs. Meadowbrook seated herself in the dental chair.

John Fisher stood closely by. Now was his turn to advise, and he fairly smiled with vindictive pleasure. But not for long, for when the dentist had succeded in breaking off one and crushing another of his patient's teeth in a futile attempt at extraction, that lady looked up with a beatific smile and remarked: "After all, pain is wholly in the mind. Don't you think so, doctor?"

"I am satisfied of that," said the dentist.

John Fisher's jaw fell mutely.

The dentist now dug out the splinters of the two teeth he had broken off and proceeded to bore great cavities into four other teeth in the mouth of Mrs. Meadowbrook, that lady not uttering a single complaint the while, nor once so much as wincing, but throughout the operation bearing herself as easily as if at a play.

"I cannot give you any more time this morning," stated the dentist.

Mrs. Meadowbrook arose and smiled on her son-in-law. "Now, John, remember that physical pain is all in the mind, and if you will believe that your tooth doesn't hurt—why, as I said before, it won't."

Again John Fisher seated himself in the dental chair and again the surgeon began boring with that fine-pointed drill.

'Getting pretty near the nerve," remarked the latter, by way of information.

John Fisher made no reply, but, like the parrot that couldn't talk, he thought a great deal. Bracing himself in the chair, he sought to conceal his squirmings from his argus-eyed mother-in-law, for, after the wonderful example of the power of mind over matter set by that lady, he was determined that his conduct should be above the reproach of a Spartan.

"All in the mind!" he thought. "Great jumping frogs! What kind of a mind has she?"

Even the hour in the dental chair has its ending—"This, too, shall pass away!"—and at last John Fisher's tooth could have nothing more done for it for the time being, and he arose, quit the dentist's office and walked home with his mother-in-law.

Occasionally he would glance sideways at her out of admiring eyes. "What a mind that woman must have!" he thought.

He took her into a store and bought her an expensive hat and sunshade. "Nothing's too good for a woman like that!" was his secret reflection.

An hour later he got into dispute with a friend who maintained that the mind has no power whatever over physical pain.

"What!" cried John Fisher. "The mind has no power over pain! You don't know what you're talking about. You should have seen my mother-in-law at the dentist's this forenoon. Great Scott, you should have seen her! She had two teeth pulled and the nerves killed in four others, and she didn't take any gas, but just believed it didn't hurt, and—why, it didn't!"

'Are you speaking of Mrs. Meadowbrook?" inquired the friend.

"Yes, my mother-in-law."

The friend smiled. "But, I say, hasn't Mrs. Meadowbrook false teeth?"

"False teeth!"

"Why, yes, aren't all of her teeth false?"

John Fisher suddenly slapped his friend on the back and laughed loudly. "Ha! ha! I was just seeing if you would bite!"

Used Mud Telegraph Poles.

What a writer calls "the most original telegraph line in the world" once extended between the city of La Paz, the capital of Bolivia, and the town of Oruro. In this part of Bolivia there are no growing trees and wood is so difficult to procure that even the ordinary household furniture of the natives is invariably made, not of wood, but of dried mud, or adobe, as it is called. When the war broke out in 1880 between Chile and Bolivia this material was used to construct pillars to take the place of ordinary posts for supporting telegraph wire, with the addition of old bottles as insulators. These pillars were subsequently built on stone foundations and measured about five feet square at the base, with a height of about 15 feet. They were placed at intervals of about 361 feet, and thus held the wire at a height sufficient to clear the only animals of the country, the lama and donkey. The total length of the line was 156 miles and it rendered useful service for some ten years before being replaced by a wooden telegraph-pole line.

The General Demand

of the Well-Informed of the World has always been for a simple, pleasant and efficient liquid laxative remedy of known value; a laxative which physicians could sanction for family use because its component parts are known to them to be wholesome and truly beneficial in effect, acceptable to the system and gentle, yet prompt, in action.

In supplying that demand with its excellent combination of Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, the California Fig Syrup Co. proceeds along ethical lines and relies on the merits of the laxative for its remarkable success.

That is one of many reasons why Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna is given the preference by the Well-Informed. To get its beneficial effects always buy the genuine—manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., only, and for sale by all leading druggists. Price fifty cents per bottle.

I used one remedy after another without benefit. Finally I used a box of Doan's Kidney Pills and the backache ceased. Encouraged, I kept on, and by the time I had used three boxes not a sign of the trouble remained. My health is perfect."

Eczema Lasted 7 Years—Face Was All Raw—Skin Specialists Failed, But Cuticura Effected Cure.

"When my little boy was six weeks old an eruption broke out on his face. I took him to a doctor, but his face kept on getting worse until it got so bad that no one could look at him. His whole face was one crust and must have been very painful. He scratched day and night until his face was raw. Then I took him to all the best specialists in skin diseases but they could not do much for him. The eczema got on his arms and legs and we could not get a night's sleep in months. I got a set of Cuticura Remedies and he felt relieved the first time I used them. I gave the Cuticura Remedies a good trial and gradually the eczema healed all up. He is now seven years old and I think the trouble will never return. Mrs. John G. Klumpp, 80 Niagara St., Newark, N. J., Oct. 17 and 22, 1907."

TIPPING IN BOHEMIA.

Even the Street Car Conductor Expects His Gratuity.

In the city of Prague a tip to the tramway conductor is considered de rigueur. The orthodox tip consists of but 2 heller, or two-tenths of a penny, yet as "strap hanging" is allowed for in considering the carrying capacity of the car the conductors should have got a goodly pocketful of the minimum coin by each day's end.

Tipping, it was ascertained in another of Bohemia's larger towns, is so fully recognized that the head waiter at a cafe pays a rent for his post, supplies all the journals for the coffee room and looks after the other waiters and then makes an income larger than that of a university professor, all out of his tips.

After supper at one of the delightful open air cafes of the capital it was found that approximately one should give a half krone (fivepence) to the head waiter who took payment, twopence to the underwaiter who brought the viands and a halfpenny to the boy who brought—and even brought again as one glass was finished—the beer.—London Chronicle.

Don't Say Cologne.

She sprinkled eau de cologne liberally in the bath of pink marble. "It is this perfume," she said learnedly, "which makes us think that the town of Cologne must be scented. Johann Maria Farina invented 200 years ago in Cologne a perfume made of the oils of neroli, citron, bergamot, orange and rosemary. He called the perfume after his city, eau de Cologne—water of Cologne. By the same token, had he been a Londoner, he'd have called it eau de London. In that case the illiterate would now think London a scented city, and instead of saying correctly, 'Put a few drops of perfume on my handkerchief,' they would say, 'Put a few drops of London on it.' In fact, it is a very vulgar and silly error to call all perfumes cologne. You might as well call them Chicago or Denver."—New York Press.

No Satisfaction.

The Editor—Eh, what's wrong?

The Correspondent—In that letter of mine that you printed this morning several gross errors were permitted to appear. Look at this. I wrote "Nobody has any desire to impeach the rugged quality of Mr Skimmerhorn's honesty," and you turned "honesty" into "hosiery." Look at it!

"I see it. And, what's more, I see nothing wrong about it. Anything else?"

"Yes, here's another. This is what I wrote: 'Mr. Skimmerhorn's ripe experience and his respect for honor must not be forgotten.' And you speak here of his 'tripe experience' and his 'respect for Homer.'"

"Yes, that's so. And they're both highly commendable virtues. Good morning, sir."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Hurry Fad.

"Mr. Cleveland," said a Princeton lecturer, "had little sympathy with the rush and hurry that the American business man so complacently affects—no sympathy with train and boat dictation, with the lunch table telephone, the letter phonograph and the other bluffs.

"'Don't rush so,' Mr. Cleveland once said to me. 'Lightning might do a great deal more if it wasn't always in such an awful hurry.'"—Washington Star.

The More Notable.

"Which would you call more notable, the prima donna's debut or her farewell?"

"Her farewell. Wouldn't you?"

"Don't know that I would. She can make but one debut."

Marlin

For shooting the swift flying, heavily feathered ducks and geese the Marlin 12-gauge repeating shotgun has no superior. This gun is exceedingly strong in construction and yet is not heavy. It is bored to throw an excellent pattern with great penetration. The solid top keeps out the weather and the brush and twigs of the blind, and the side ejector prevents the empty shells from being a nuisance to the shooter. It's the best bad weather gun.

The Marlin 12-gauge is suited to all forms of bird and trap shooting, and for durability, strength and ease of action is unexcelled. Made for both black and smokeless powders and for heavy loads. Two separate extractors make sure work.

K. K. Sannes and Thos. Florence were among the number of those who were in yesterday from Equality. They report having finished up the season's threshing with Mr. Sannes' rig and that they put in forty-five and a half days of steady work, earning about $1,500. This is a fine showing for this part of the country where some people think there is no grain raised.

Thanksgiving Brides.

On Tuesday, the 10th inst, Emil Gauthier and Miss Louisa Desautel, of Brooks, were married at Lambert, Rev. Fr. King officiating. There was a number of invited guests who witnessed the ceremony and in the evening a sumptuous supper was served and the night joyously spent in dancing. The happy young couple have taken up their residence for the present at the home of the groom's parents south of Plummer and have the the best wishes of a host of friends for a long and happy married life.

On last Tuesday, the 17th inst, Phil Riendau and Miss Permelia Gauthier were united in the holy bonds of matrimony, the ceremony being performed at Terrebonne. They have started housekeeping at the Riendau home and all who know them wish them every happiness.

Earmers' Institute.

A meeting of the business men of Plummer was held on Wednesday evening for the purpose of considering a proposition to have a Farmer' Institute here sometime before Christmas. All present seemed to be in favor of the project and committees were appointed to arrange for the securing of the necessary speakers, the proper advertising of the occasion and also the arrangement of a suitable program of music and other entertainment for the visiting farmers. The business men may dacide to make a special line of bargains for the day and otherwise offer inducements for the farmers to attend and get better acquainted.

There is little doubt but that the Institute will be held and the date and program will be announced later.

Ed. L. Erickson was in from Equality yesterday and called to subscribe for the PIONEER for a year in advance.

The Sneeze Inopportune.

"Of all the embarrassing predicaments, the one that I was in was the worst ever," said a prosperous downtown business man, addressing his partner in their office on the fifteenth floor of one of the Broadway skyscrapers.

"I got in the elevator a few moments ago," he continued, "and the draft as we shot roofward caused me to sneeze. I felt it coming, and as I opened my mouth for a hearty 'achu' out popped my $150 set of false teeth. Say, when that car full of silly stenographers began to snicker I could have gone through a keyhole without touching sides, top or bottom!"—New York Globe.

WHIMS IN WILLS.

Curious Desires Have Actuated Many Testaters.

The dryness of the law is sometimes alleviated by the freaks and whims that appear in wills.

Some persons have used their wills as means of paying off old scores. In 1770 Stephan Swain of the parish of St. Olaves, London, left "John Abbott and Mary, his wife, 6 shillings each for a halter for fear the sheriff should not be provided." In 1793 Philip Thickness willed that his right hand be cut off and sent to his son "in hopes that such a sight may remind him of his duty to God after having so long neglected the duty he owed to a father who once affectionately loved him."

Lieutenant Colonel Nash got even with his wife by leaving the bell ringers of Bath abbey £50 a year on condition that they muffle the bells of said abbey on the anniversary of his marriage and ring them with "doleful accentuation from 8 a. m. to 8 p. m." and on the anniversary of his death to ring a merry peal for the same space "in memory of his happy release from domestic tyranny and wretchedness."

Jasper Mayne, who died in 1620, must have been a person of humor. He left his servant an old valise, stating that it contained something that would enable him to drink. When the valise was opened it was found to contain only a red herring.

Occasionally a testator exhibits an original idea as to the disposition of his body. Sieur Benoit, whose will was probated in Paris in 1877, ordered that he be buried in his old trunk to save the expense of a coffin. He added that he was attached to the trunk, it having gone around the world with him three times.—New York Post.

Got Near It.

A primary teacher was presenting to her class selections from the story of Hiawatha preparatory to taking up the "Hiawatha Primer." The story was prefaced by a few remarks in regard to the poet and his love for children. In reviewing the lesson she asked:

"How many remember the name of the poet who wrote this story?"

Up went many hands.

"You may tell us, Sarah," added the teacher, noticing the little one wildly waving her hand in her intense eagerness to respond.

"Mr. Longlegs," said the child, with evident pride.—Lippincott's.

John Is Still Alive.

You may think that I am dead just because you have not heard from me recently, but such is not the case. Call at my place of business and you will find me just as ever.

Thanksgiving is coming along and so is Christmas. Now, do not forget the Sunny Brook Saloon, as I have on hand all kinds of Liquors; also three barrels of fine Apple Cider, which you will need for Mince Meats, at only 50 cents per gallon. I also give you an opportunity to treat your wife, or your affianced, by buying Port Wine for $2.00 per gallon. It is not necessary to send to Sears, Sawbuck & Co. when you can get better goods for less money right here. When you want liquors for medical purposes buy the genuine California Brandy. I have it on hand and guarantee its purity. And when alcohol is extinct buy a gallon of Sunny Brook as it will answer the purpose, especially for hot drinks.

When in town go to Sunny Brook John and buy what you really want. He has it and will wait on you with the greatest courtesy. When John is not there himself he has a substitute, a Dane, named Christ Christensen; he will fill the Bill—or the Jug, as may be required.

Thanking you for your past patronage and hoping that it will increase in the future,

Yours as ever,
Sunny Brook John.

The Missing Feature.

"That meadow scene looks far from natural," declared the stage manager.

"What can ail it?"

"Begosh, I believe it's the absence of advertising signs!"—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Sneaky.

Magistrate—Sneaky sort of man? What do you mean, sir? Witness—Well, sorr, he's the sort of man that'll never look ye straight in the face until your back's turned."

There's no phosphorescence in flowers to speak of, but they may lighten up many a darkened spot in life.—Manchester Union.

SEVERE HEMORRHOIDS

Sores, and Itching Eczema—Doctor Thought an Operation Necessary —Cuticura's Efficacy Proven.

"I am now 80 years old, and three years ago I was taken with an attack of piles (hemorrhoids), bleeding and protruding. The doctor said the only help for me was to go to a hospital and be operated on. I tried several remedies for months but did not get much help. During this time sores appeared which changed to a terrible itching eczema. Then I began to use Cuticura Soap, Ointment, and Pills, injecting a quantity of Cuticura Ointment with a Cuticura Suppository Syringe. It took a month of this treatment to get me in a fairly healthy state and then I treated myself once a day for three months and, after that, once or twice a week. The treatments I tried took a lot of money, and it is fortunate that I used Cuticura. J. H. Henderson, Hopkinton, N. Y., Apr 26, 1907."

FUN FOR "HAPPY COUPLE."

Modern Wedding Described with Possibly Slight Exaggeration.

The young pair had so many friends that the police were quite unable to cope with the situation. The bride was headed up in a barrel and thrown into the river, while the groom was bound and gagged and suspended by his feet from a tall tree.

At this point the military was called out and arrived at double quick just in time to save the baggage from being pasted over with insulting placards.

A number of shot were exchanged.

At a late hour the city was reported quiet and the authorities, though not denying the popularity of the high contracting parties, were confident that there would be no more violence —Puck.

Uncle Ben Liked Her.

A Kansas City girl recently married a man who lives in one of the smaller near-by towns, and went there with him to live. The bridegroom was naturally eager that his relatives should like his bride and as one, an old farmer, voiced no complimentary opinion in his hearing he at last asked:

"Uncle Ben, what do you think of my wife?"

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Snake in a Beer-Barrel.

A party of foreigners tapped a keg of beer at Lake Altoona, Pa., but could not get the fluid through the spigot. Investigation disclosed the fact that the bunghole was stopped up by a snake. The reptile must have crawled into the keg while it was lying empty on the ground, and was drowned when the keg was filled.

FIERCE SCHOOL RIOT RAGES

ST. PIERRE MOB STONES THE JUDGES WHO FINED THE TEACHERS.

Dissatisfied With British Rules and Desire Annexation to the United States. The Trouble Arises Over School Matters.

St. Johns, N. F., Nov. 19.—The agitation in St. Pierre, Miq., over the question of free schools continued yesterday according to advices received last night but the crowds parading the streets were orderly.

Many of the agitators talked loudly on uniting the colony with the United States, contending that such a step would mean not only civil and religious liberty for the population but would revive fishing industry.

Last night while the large number of the clerical supporters were parading the windows of the government schoolhouse were broken by stone throwers and there was a demonstration against Judge Siegfried, who imposed the fine upon the school teachers for keeping the schools open.

Judge Siegfried's residence was made the target for stones, and when he appeared at the front of the house stones were hurled at him and he was hooted by the mob. Other officials received similar treatment.

Fearing further disturbances, the administrator enrolled a large staff of officials to assist the gendarmes available in preserving the peace.

In spite of these precautions the demonstration proceeded unchanged throughout the evening. About midnight the administrator addressed the agitators and their followers, urging them to remain quiet and abstain from any further demonstration until word could be received from the minister of the colonies.

HANSBROUGH A CANDIDATE.

The North Dakota Senator Announces His Candidacy.

Grand Forks, N. D., Nov. 16.—Senator H. C. Hansbrough, through a letter to all the members of the North Dakota legislature, has declared himself a candidate for re-election to the United States senate.

Pointing to the fact that in the election, on which M. N. Johnson was choice for senator, from 10,000 to 12,000 Democrats voted for Marshall or Johnson, Republicans, Senator Hansbrough declares moral obligation to vote for the candidate chosen has been obliterated.

Receipt of the senator's letter has created a decided sensation in the state. Hurried conference of Johnson's managers called last night to consider best method to head off opposition.

It is known that Hansbrough has quite a following, especially in senate and has powerful backing on the outside. The bitterest fight in history of North Dakota is predicted.

FATAL CURIOSITY.

Laborer Explodes Cap Which Sets Off Lot of Dynamite.

Duluth, Minn., Nov. 16.—Conrad S. Orland, a farm hand employed at clearing land near the town of Adolph, in St. Louis county, paid the penalty of idle curiosity with his life, and a relative of his employer is seriously injured. The latter's name is Charles Burland.

Dynamite was being freely used to dislodge stumps from the ground. The men were sitting about a fire just after dinner and Orland was fingering a dynamite cap.

"I wonder how much of a noise this would make all by itself," said Orland, as he tossed the cap into the fire. The explosion of the cap was of sufficient energy to set of nineteen sticks of dynamite that lay near by. Orland was picked up in pieces.

Four Children Perish.

Alliance, Ohio, Nov. 14.—The country home of John Wampfler, a milk dealer, was destroyed by fire. Four children, Lucille, aged nine; Leroy, seven; Katherine, five; Charles, three, perished in the flames. The parents and three children escaped. The father was badly burned, but will recover.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Bank Protection.

Mankato.—Within two months there will be in operation among the country banks of Minnesota a new plan for the protection of bank deposits. It is a plan devised by bankers instead of by politicians, and those who are fathering it firmly believe that it will actually achieve all the beneficial results which were promised by the advocates of the bank guarantee scheme. Throughout the recent campaign, plans for the new idea have been quietly carried forward.

W. D. Willard, cashier of the First National bank was in Minneapolis. He is chairman of a committee appointed last spring by the bankers of the second congressional district of Minnesota to organize the banks in that district for the operation of an independent system of examination along the line of that now in operation in the twin cities. Sickness in the committee has delayed its work to some extent, but it is probable that the first of the new year will see the independent bank examination under way in the second district.

Amendments Fail.

St. Paul.—Nineteen counties that have given their official vote on the tax amendment leave it far short of the necessary majority of all the votes cast in those counties. These nineteen counties include the three big counties. Ramsey county gave the amendment just a little below a majority and the usual proportion against it. St. Louis county gave it only a small vote, with a large vote against it. But Hennepin county gave it the worst set back, for they were so busy voting for city officials, getting acquainted with the new knobs on their voting machines that they forgot to vote on the amendment. Only one of each four that voted cast an affirmative vote, and only about one of every sixteen cast a negative vote.

Famous Woods on Fire.

Chandler.—A forest fire has been raging in Lost Timber, west of this village and has destroyed a large part of the timber which is widely known because of the fact that under their protection the Jesse James band of desperadoes made escape after the famous Northfield robbery of Sept. 6, 1876.

The origin of the fire has not been discovered. Hunters may have started the blaze or it may have been set by farmer boys.

Lost Timber is in a sheltered portion of the long range of hills known as the Coteau del Prairie which extends for nearly 100 miles northwest from this village into the Dakotas.

Wheat to Germany.

Duluth.—Germany bought Minnesota and Dakota wheat today for shipment to Hamburg. There was much secrecy about the transaction. The first report was that a Minneapolis firm made the sale. The Peavy company did not confirm it. The Van Dusen-Harrington company said they did not sell it, but that five loads were sold to go down the lakes from Duluth. It was finally learned that the Ames-Brookes company sold the wheat, five boat loads in all, meaning canal boat measurement, which equals about 40,000 bushels. This is a trivial quantity, considering the mammoth proportions of the grain trade as a whole.

Drowned.

Duluth.—While skating on the artificial lake of the Great Northern Power company at 3 o'clock, Frank McLeod, aged twelve, and Ralph Hynes, aged twelve, were drowned. The boys were close together when the ice gave way and both went down and were drowned before help could be given them. The Haynes boy was a son of John F. Haynes, cashier of the First National Bank of Carlton.

The bodies were recovered an hour later.

NEWS NOTES.

Minneapolis.—The attraction at the Bijou Opera House, Minneapolis, for the week of November 22nd, is one that is sure to appeal to all lovers of melodrama. It is Harry Clay Blaney's old success, "The Boy Detective," which served him as a starring vehicle for several seasons. Johnnie Hoey, a well-known and popular little comedian, will take the leading role.

St. Paul.—Two young well-dressed youths, both armed with revolvers, held up Otto Lindberg, a clerk in the grocery store of C. Nelson, 808 Sixteenth avenue south, at the point of their guns, and rifled the cash drawer of $10.19. The highwaymen then escaped.

Minneapolis—At the Bijou opera house soon will appear Mr. Joseph O'Mara in a new melodrama entitled "Peggy Machree." Mr. O'Mara is a native of Ireland and one of the sweetest singers that ever came from the "ould sod." His appearance in London was a tremenduous success and staid old Philadelphia went wild over him. He is a student of old Irish songs and introduces several.

Duluth.—Roger Olds of Cloquet, Minn., was found dead in the woods, seventeen miles from his home today. He was deer hunting, and had been killed, apparently, by his own rifle.

Minneapolis.—The primary election on Sept. 15 and the general election on Nov. 3 cost the city approximately $21,694, or $12,106 less than it cost to hold the elections in 1906.

Crookston.—The announcement was made in this city that the big sawmill of the Crookston Lumber company again would begin operations in the spring of 1909.

A SURGICAL OPERATION

If there is any one thing that a woman dreads more than another it is a surgical operation.

We can state without fear of a contradiction that there are hundreds, yes, thousands, of operations performed upon women in our hospitals which are entirely unnecessary and many have been avoided by

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND

For proof of this statement read the following letters.

Mrs. Barbara Base, of Kingman, Kansas, writes to Mrs. Pinkham:

"For eight years I suffered from the most severe form of female troubles and was told that an operation was my only hope of recovery. I wrote Mrs. Pinkham for advice, and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it has saved my life and made me a well woman."

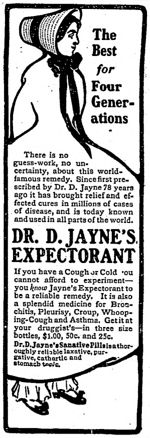
Mrs. Arthur R. House, of Church Road, Moorestown, N. J., writes:

"I feel it is my duty to let people know what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I suffered from female troubles, and last March my physician decided that an operation was necessary. My husband objected, and urged me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and to-day I am well and strong."

FACTS FOR SICK WOMEN.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has positively cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, and backache.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health. Address, Lynn, Mass.



The Best for Four Generations

There is no guess-work, no uncertainty, about this world-famous remedy. Since first prescribed by Dr. D. Jayne 78 years ago it has brought relief and effected cures in millions of cases of disease, and is today known and used in all parts of the world.

DR. D. JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT

If you have a Cough or Cold you cannot afford to experiment—you know Jayne's Expectorant to be a reliable remedy. It is also a splendid medicine for Bronchitis, Pleurisy, Croup, Whooping-Cough and Asthma. Get it at your druggist's—in three size bottles, $1.00, 50c. and 25c.

Dr. D. Jayne's Sanative Pills is a thoroughly reliable laxative, purgative, cathartic and stomach tonic.

"The Last Best West"

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

The government of Canada now gives to every actual settler 160 acres of wheat-growing land free and an additional 160 acres at $3.00 an acre. The 300,000 contented American settlers making their homes in Western Canada is the best evidence of the superiority of that country. They are becoming rich, growing from 25 to 50 bushels wheat to the acre; 60 to 110 bushels oats and 45 to 60 bushels barley, besides having splendid herds of cattle raised on the prairie grass. Dairying is an important industry.

The crop of 1908 still keeps Western Canada in the lead. The world will soon look to it as its food-producer.

The Pumpkin

By John Greenleaf Whittier

Ah!—on Thanksgiving Day, when from East and from West,
From North and from South come the pilgrim and guest,
When the gray-haired New Englander sees round his board
The old broken links of affection restored,
When the care-wearied man seeks his mother once more,
And the worn matron smiles where the girl smiled before,
What moistens the lip and what brightens
the eye?
What calls back the past, like the rich
Pumpkin pie?

Thanksgiving

Sing unto the Lord with thanksgiving. —Psalm 147:7.

THANKSGIVING is one of our highest and holiest duties. There are in the Scriptures more commands and calls to praise than to prayer. Yet few duties are more frequently neglected than this. There are many people who are always coming to God with requests but who do not come to him with thanksgiving after their requests have been granted. Ten lepers once cried to Jesus for cleansing, as he was passing them at a distance. He graciously heard them and granted their plea. When they had been healed, one of the ten returned to thank the healer, but the other nine came not again with any word of recognition of the great favor they had received. So it is continually—many are blessed and helped, but few show gratitude. Our Lord felt keenly the ingratitude of the lepers who returned not. "Where are the nine?" was his pained question. God pours out his gifts and blessings every day upon his children; and whenever no voice of thanksgiving is heard in return he misses it. If one bird of the forest is silent in the glad spring day, he misses its song. If one human heart fails to utter its praise amid life's countless blessings, he is disappointed.

Many there are who think that if certain definite days are set apart for praise it is enough. For example, they will be grateful for a whole day once in a year, touching then every chord of praise in their being, thinking that this is the way God wants them to show their gratitude. But the annual Thanksgiving day is not intended to gather into itself the thanksgiving for a whole year; rather it is intended to give the keynote for all the year's life. Life's true concert pitch is praise. If we find that we are below the right pitch, we should take advantage of the particular thanksgiving seasons to get keyed up. When the strings of life begin to grow discordant thanksgiving will put us in tune.

The ideal life is one of gladness. Unthankfulness and fretfulness are discords in the song. We have no right to live gloomily or sadly. Go where we may, we hear the music of joy, unless our ears have become tone-deaf. The world is full of beauty and full of music. Yet it is strange how many people seem neither to see the loveliness nor hear the music. It were well if many of us would train ourselves to see the glory and goodness of God, as revealed in nature. It will be sad to leave this world, after staying in it three-score or four-score years without having seen any of the ten thousand beauties with which God had adorned it. "Consider the lilies," said Jesus. Every sweet flower has a message of joy to him who can read the writing. One who loves God's flowers and birds and trees and mountains and rivers and seas, and has learned to heed the voices which everywhere whisper their secrets to him who understands, can never be sad or lonely. The power to hear what nature's voices have to say is in our hearts, not merely in the ear. We must have the beauty in our souls before we can see beauty anywhere. Hence there are many who are really blind to the loveliness which God has strewn everywhere, with most lavish hand, in his works. So we must have the music in our heart before we can hear the music which sings everywhere for him who has ears to hear. If we have thanksgiving within us, we will have no trouble in finding gladness wherever we go. It is a sad and cheerless heart that makes the world seem dreary to certain people; if only they will let joy enter to dwell within, a new world would be created for them. If we allow our heart to cherish unlovingness, bitterness, evil thoughts or feelings, we cannot hear the music of love which breathes everywhere, pouring out from the heart of God. But if we keep our heart gentle, patient, lowly, and kind, on our ears will fall, wherever we go, sweet strains of divine music.

Then a glad life makes a life of gladness wherever it goes. It leaves an unbroken lane of sunbeams behind it. Everybody is better as well as happier for meeting one whose Christian life radiates gladness and cheer. We can do nothing better either for ourselves or for the world in which we live than to learn the lesson of praise and of thanksgiving. "Let us learn to sing unto the Lord with thanksgiving." There are troubles in every life, but there are a thousand good things for one trial. Sometimes we have disappointments but even these are really God's appointments, as some day we shall find out. If people are unkind to us, we must go on loving just as before, our hearts full of unconquerable kindness, and it will finally win. The most deep-seated tendency to sadness can be overcome and replaced by happy cheerfulness. The gospel of Christ comes to us and tells us that we must be born again, born from above, born of God, and our very nature will be recreated. Then divine grace assures us that it is not impossible even for the most unholy life to be transformed into holiness. The being that is saturated with sin may be whiter than snow. There is no nature, therefore, however unhappy it may be because of its original quality or its early training, which cannot through divine help learn the lesson of happiness and thanksgiving. The secret of Christian joy is the peace of Christ in the heart. Then one is not dependent upon circumstances or conditions. St. Paul said he had learned in whatsoever state he was therein to be content. We know well that his circumstances were not always congenial nor easy, but he sang songs in his prison with as cheerful a heart as when he was enjoying the hospitality of a loving friend. There might be hardships, sufferings, and want; but in himself he had the peace of Christ; and this sustained him. St. Paul's secret of contentment is the Christian's true secret of a happy life.

> "It is both the duty and the privilege of a Christian people to recognize their obligations to the bountiful Giver of all good, and to recognize the fresh and continued evidence of the Divine favor and forbearance during the past year."

SOME REMARKS FROM MINNESOTA EDITORS.

What They Think of Western Canada.

A party of editors from a number of cities and towns of Minnesota recently made a tour of Western Canada, and having returned to their homes they are now telling in their respective newspapers of what they saw on their Canadian trip. The West St. Paul Times recalls the excursion of the Minnesota editors from Winnipeg to the Pacific Coast ten years ago. Referring to what has happened in the interval the writer says: "Thousands of miles of new railway lines have been built, and the development of the country has made marvelous strides. Millions of acres, then lying in their wild and untouched state, have since been transferred into grain fields. Towns have sprung up as if by the wand of a magician, and their development is now in full progress. It is a revelation, a record of conquest by settlement that is remarkable."

The Hutchinson Leader characterizes Western Canada as "a great country undeveloped. The summer outing," it says, "was an eye-opener to every member of the party, even those who were on the excursion through Western Canada ten years ago, over considerable of the territory covered this year, being amazed at the progress and advancement made in that short space of time. The time will come when Western Canada will be the bread-basket of the world. It was a delightful outing through a great country of wonderful possibilities and resources."

Since the visit of these editors the Government has revised its land regulations and it is now possible to secure 160 acres of wheat land at $3.00 an acre in addition to the 160 acres that may be homesteaded.

The crops of 1908 have been splendid, and reports from the various districts show good yields, which at present prices will give excellent profits to the farmers.

From Milestone, Saskatchewan, there are reported yields of thirty bushels of spring wheat to the acre, while the average is about 20 bushels. The quality of grain to be shipped from this point will be about 600,000 bushels. Information regarding free lands and transportation will be freely given by the Canadian Government Agents.

WARNED OF THE CYCLONE.

Telephone Just a Few Seconds Ahead of High Wind.

Once upon a time a Kansas zephyr broke loose and meandered about the country, picking up various things. Bill Baumgartner's telephone, 20 miles away, rang:

"Is that you, Bill?" yelled an excited voice.

"Yes. What's the matter?"

"This is Frank. We've got a cyclone down here, and it's headed your way. Look out! I—" Frank's voice broke off suddenly. Bill heard a crash and a sputtering, then all was silence. He gathered up his family and rushed them to a deep ravine. They were just in time to dodge a funnel-shaped cloud that wrecked the house, picked up his barn, two cows, and a couple of miles of fence.—Hampton's Broadway Magazine.

UPWARD START

After Changing from Coffee to Postum.

Many a talented person is kept back because of the interference of coffee with the nourishment of the body.

This is especially so with those whose nerves are very sensitive, as is often the case with talented persons. There is a simple, easy way to get rid of coffee evils and a Tenn. lady's experience along these lines is worth considering. She says:

"Almost from the beginning of the use of coffee it hurt my stomach. By the time I was fifteen I was almost a nervous wreck, nerves all unstrung, no strength to endure the most trivial thing, either work or fun.

"There was scarcely anything I could eat that would agree with me. The little I did eat seemed to give me more trouble than it was worth. I finally quit coffee and drank hot water, but there was so little food I could digest, I was literally starving; was so weak I could not sit up long at a time.

"It was then a friend brought me a hot cup of Postum. I drank part of it and after an hour I felt as though I had had something to eat — felt strengthened. That was about five years ago, and after continuing Postum in place of coffee and gradually getting stronger, to-day I can eat and digest anything I want, walk as much as I want. My nerves are steady.

"I believe the first thing that aid me any good and gave me an upward start, was Postum, and I use it altogether now instead of coffee." "There's a Reason."

RHEUMATISM PRESCRIPTION

The increased use of whiskey for rheumatism is causing considerable discussion among the medical fraternity. It is an almost infallible cure when mixed with certain other ingredients and taken properly. The following formula is effective: "To one-half pint of good whiskey add one ounce of Toris Compound and one ounce of Syrup Sarsaparilla Compound. Take in tablespoonful doses before each meal and before retiring."

Toris compound is a product of the laboratories of the Globe Pharmaceutical Co., Chicago, but it as well as the other ingredients can be had from any good druggist.

Marlin

For shooting the swift flying, heavily feathered ducks and geese the Marlin 12-gauge repeating shotgun has no superior. This gun is exceedingly strong in construction and yet is not heavy. It is bored to throw an excellent pattern with great penetration. The solid top keeps out the weather and the brush and twigs of the blind, and the side ejector prevents the empty shells from being a nuisance to the shooter. It's the best bad weather gun.

The Marlin 12-gauge is suited to all forms of bird and trap shooting, and for durability, strength and ease of action is unexcelled. Made for both black and smokeless powders and for heavy loads. Two separate extractors make sure work.

The Mayfield auction sale on Wednesday was very well attended and nearly everything offered sold well. Everything was sold and Mr. and Mrs. Mayfield have not fully decided as to what their next move will be but they will probably spend some time travelling and visiting before they settle down again.

Pushing To The Front.

The residents of northern Mayfield township, southern part of Kratka and eastern Wyandotte are setting a pace for the other new portions of the country in the way of development. One new ditch is now being constructed in Mayfield township which will do a lot of good in the way of drainage and road building. A petition is now before the county board for another ditch to be constructed along the town line between Mayfield and Kratka with two outlets to the Red Lake river on the north. This ditch will probably do more good for the farmers contiguous to it than any other ditch in the county and there seems to be no question but that it will be ordered established. It will give about ten miles of good roads on township and section lines, most of it being along the line of an established state road between Mayfield and Kratka townships. The people up there are enthusiastically in favor of it and the land in its territory is about the richest in the county.

In the northeast corner of Wyandotte township the people have been travelling on a prairie road which crossed a couple of farms. This short cut has now been fenced up by the farmers whose land it crossed and in order to give the people up there a good road to Plummer it is necessary to construct a half mile of grade between sections 12 and 13 in Wyandotte. The available town funds are exhausted but that will not prevent the necessary work being done. On Wednesday a subscription list was circulated at the Mayfield auction sale and it was liberally signed by the farmers and others and each one put his name down for a good sized donation. This insures the work being done just as soon as the ground can be worked and it means a lot to the business interests of Plummer as well as to the people living in the territory named.

During the coming year there will be an immense amount of good work done in the territory between the Red Lake and Clearwater rivers and in a very short time there will be no better country in northern Minnesota.

Miss Irene Caldwell, teacher of the Plummer school, went to Thief River Falls on Wednesday night to spend Thanksgiving at home.

Mrs. C. R. Bender returned on Tuesday to her home at Grand Rapids, Wis., after a visit with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Wichterman.

Drop Siding, Flooring or any kind of fine finished lumber can now be had at the S. P. K. Lumber, Cedar & Tie Co's mill yard in Plummer. You dont have to pay trust prices if you buy your lumber from this company.

On Monday, the 16th inst, a gray wool shawl was lost between the post-office in Plummer and the school-house in district No. 3, in Gervais township. The finder will confer a favor by returning same to this office.

Estray--About October 14th there came to my place and was taken up by me one red heifer calf about 6 months old. Owner can have same by paying expenses of keeping and this advertisment. Andrew Ydstie, SE ¼ section 15, Gervais township.

The basket social which was to have been held in school district number 125 on Tuesday, was postponed for one week on acount of the bad weather. It will be held on next Tuesday evening and every body is invited. The proceeds will go to the school library fund.

Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Wichterman entertained a number of visiting relatives for Thanksgiving among the number being their son, J. Wichterman, of Lindsay, and their son-in-law, E. Lasha, of Red Lake Falls, who brought Mrs. Lasha along for a visit with the home folks.

Gust Bergedahl returned yesterday from Saskatchewan where he has been looking over homestead lands for some time. He says he filed on a homestead and a pre-emption claim a short distance from Swift Current and will go up there early in the spring to make improvements on the land.

The big flour mill at Red Lake Falls, owned by the Red Lake Falls Milling Company, was totally destroyed by fire early Thursday morning. The origin of the fire is not known. The loss is placed at $75,000 with $55,000 insurance. The electric light plant adjoining the mill was saved. The mill will undoubtedly be rebuilt as it was one of the best in the northwest and enjoyed an excellent business.

A KNOCK-OUT BLOW.

Supreme Court Gives County Seat Question a Hard Knock.

On last Friday morning the Supreme Court of Minnesota rendered a decision in the Red Lake county seat removal case which practically knocks the whole proposition silly.

It will be remembered that the matter was carried to the supreme Court last spring on a question as to whether or not the county board should meet and take action on the second petition, it being alleged that the first petition had been lost or stolen from the auditor's office and that proceedings thereunder had been abandoned. The supreme court holds that the county board alone has jurisdiction to decide whether or not the original petition has been lost and proceedings abandoned and that the board has no right to act on a second petition until they have first declared the old one lost and abandoned.

It can readily be seen that this practially knocks out the whole matter for a couple of years at least. The present county board is not likely to take any action on the first petition and can not on the second.

Red Lake Falls has scored a signal victory and the next move in this long drawn out county seat fight will probably not be made until there is some radical change in the county board.

J. A. Briar, the Iowa man who purchased the Mayfield land in Mayfield and Wyandotte townships, has been here during the past few days attending to the closing up of the deal and arranging for the occupancy of the premises. He will probably remain until Monday.

The Thanksgiving ball given by some of the young men of Plummer in Carlson's Hall on Wednesday evening was quite largely attended and was an entire success. There were a number of visitors from Thief River Falls and other distant points and all had the best kind of a good time.

Andrew Johnson was here last week from Linstad, N. D., and called to pay his subscription for another year in advance. Since the PIONEER was first started Mr. Johnson has never failed to keep his subscription paid ahead. He says he had good luck with his grain in Dakota this year and his many friends here will be glad to hear of his prosperity.

Highlanding township last week sold town bonds to the amount of $3,000 and the Merchants State Bank, of Red Lake Falls purchased the Bonds We understand that the proceeds of the sale will go for the improvement of the roads in Highlanding township. Good idea; other townships in the county would do well to issue bond for the same purpose.

Charlie Wilson, of Mayfield township, was taken down to St. Paul on Tuesday evening for hospital treatment. He has been ailing for a long time but has been much worse recently. His father and Ed Miller escorted him on his journey and his numerous friends in this vicinity will hope to see him return soon entirely recovered from his illness.

FOOLED BOTH WAYS.

The Experience of a Visitor In a Lunatic Asylum.

"I was staying," says a writer in the Liverpool Mercury, "with an uncle who was on very friendly terms with a doctor who kept a private asylum and who occasionally gave a dance for the patients, while also inviting some of his friends.

"During my visit we received an invitation, and on the appointed evening we arrived to find the room crowded with people all in evening dress.

"My first partner was a man whom I thought looked decidedly queer, such a restless, hunted expression in his eyes and occasionally during the dance he stopped and glanced searchingly around. Dear me, how glad I was when the dance was over, and, making some excuse, I hurried away, only to run up against my hostess and to be introduced to my second partner.

"Ah, me, what a handsome man, and, girl-like, I fell head over ears in love. I put out my most bewitching ways and hoped I looked my best and took care that I helped him find a cozy corner for the sit-out.

"It was delightful, and I was just lamenting that it was about time for the next dance when, horrors, clutching hold of my hand and frantically waving his other hand, he started roaring out texts, when suddenly, to my relief and astonishment, who should come up followed by two men, but my first partner, whom I found to be a doctor, while my handsome partner was a religious maniac!"

Art In the Soup.

The artist's wife leaned over and looked at her husband's soup after she had handed it to him.

"Oh," she cried, "look at the scroll the fat has made in your soup. Isn't it artistic? Don't eat it. It is so beautiful."

Forced Economy.

"Then why did he?"

"Because it would have cost him a great deal more if he hadn't."—London Tatler.

JOEL CHANDLER HARRIS.

The Way He Came to Write His "Uncle Remus" Stories.

Many great works of genius, as is well known, have been produced by accident, and an author is seldom the best judge of his own work. When Joel Chandler Harris wrote the first of his "Uncle Remus" stories and presented it for publication he did so with a hundred misgivings. He was not sure that his venture in negro folklore would prove successful. He could not know that they would bring him worldwide fame.

At the time described Mr. Harris was a young man of twenty-eight, employed on the Atlanta Constitution. Sam W. Small, afterward a revivalist, who had been writing for the same paper a popular column of negro story and dialect, had just resigned from the staff. The managing editor of the Constitution, wishing to continue the feature, said to Harris one day: "Joel, it seems to me you could do that sort of thing to a tee. See if you can't turn in something tonight."

The young writer's memory flitted back to his early days on a plantation. All the quaint settings of negro life—the little cabins, the fiddling darkies, the wrinkled story teller, the black "mammies," the noisy corn shuckings, the bobtailed rabbits disappearing along the road—came hurrying from the past. Late that afternoon he turned in his copy. The next day his reputation was made.—Current Literature.

Venice Too Wet For Her.

A woman who recently returned from a trip to Europe says wet weather hasn't bothered this country at all in comparison with what she saw abroad. She says that they ran into a town named Venice where the water covered every street, and you couldn't get anywhere except in boats. She added: "You bet we only stayed one day in that slosh."—Kansas City Star.

A Bad Spell.

"Poor Jack! He never could spell, and it ruined him."

"How?"

"He wrote a verse to an heiress he was in love with and he wrote boney for bonny."

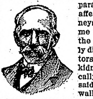
ONE KIDNEY GONE

But Cured After Doctors Said There Was No Hope.



Sylvanus O. Verrill, Milford, Me., says: "Five years ago a bad injury paralyzed me and affected my kidneys. My back hurt me terribly, and the urine was badly disordered. Doctors said my right kidney was practically dead. They said I could never walk again. I read of Doan's Kidney Pills and began using them. One box made me stronger and freer from pain. I kept on using them and in three months was able to get out on crutches, and the kidneys were acting better. I improved rapidly, discarded the crutches and to the wonder of my friends was soon completely cured."

NO SKIN LEFT ON BODY.

For Six Months Baby Was Expected to Die with Eczema—Now Well —Doctor Said to Use Cuticura.

"Six months after birth my little girl broke out with eczema and I had two doctors in attendance. There was not a particle of skin left on her body, the blood oozed out just anywhere, and we had to wrap her in silk and carry her on a pillow for ten weeks. She was the most terrible sight I ever saw, and for six months I looked for her to die. I used every known remedy to alleviate her suffering, for it was terrible to witness. Dr. C—— gave her up. Dr. B—— recommended the Cuticura Remedies. She will soon be three years old and has never had a sign of the dread trouble since. We used about eight cakes of Cuticura Soap and three boxes of Cuticura Ointment. James J. Smith, Durmid, Va., Oct. 14 and 22, 1906."

No Cremation.

"I was visiting Atlanta during the late wave of reform there," recently said a Philadelphian, "when I overheard an amusing conversation in a barber shop between a patron and the boy who shines shoes.

"I saw you playing craps this morning," said the patron, by way of a joke. "If the grand jury got at you, it would make you tell all about the gambling among the darkies."

"No, suh, dey wouldn't," protested the negro, warmly. "I knows enough about de law to know dat a man doan have t' tell nothin' dat cremates hisse'f."

Mr. Lapsling's Mean Joke.

"You have named the baby Tetanus?" exclaimed the horrified caller.

"Yes," answered Mrs. Lapsling, "I think that's what we'll call her. It's the name my husband suggests."

"But think how it will mortify her when she grows to be a young woman! Do you know what 'tetanus' means? It means lockjaw."

"You must be mistaken about that. He says it means silent, quiet, reserved."

Spoils for Fashion's Followers.

At auctions in London during the last half of 1907 there were catalogued for sale 19,742 skins of birds of paradise, nearly 115,000 white heron plumes and a vast number of the skins and plumes of many other birds of beautiful plumage, including albatross quills and the tails of the lyre bird.

NEW LIFE

After one suffers from acid dyspepsia, sour stomach, for months and then finds the remedy is in getting the right kind of food it is something to speak out about.

A N. Y. lady and her young son had such an experience and she wants others to know how to get relief. She writes:

"For about fifteen months my little boy and myself had suffered with sour stomach. We were unable to retain much of anything we ate.

"After suffering in this way for so long I decided to consult a specialist in stomach diseases. Instead of prescribing drugs, he put us both on Grape-Nuts and we began to improve immediately.

"It was the key to a new life. I found we had been eating too much heavy food which we could not digest. In a few weeks after commencing Grape-Nuts I was able to do my housework. I wake in the morning with a clear head and feel rested and have no sour stomach. My boy sleeps well and wakes with a laugh.

"We have regained our lost weight and continue to eat Grape-Nuts for both the morning and evening meals. We are well and happy and owe it to Grape-Nuts." "There's a Reason."

TARIFF PROBERS INVITE CARNEGIE

COMMITTEE WISHES TO HEAR HIM ON IRON AND STEEL.

IS RESULT OF HIS ARTICLE

Import Tax on Tiles, Lime, Cement and Kindred Manufactures Is Considered at a Long Session.

Washington, Nov. 24.—As a result of the declaration of Andrew Carnegie in an article in the forthcoming number of the Century Magazine that the tariff schedules on iron and steel should be reduced, the ways and means committee of the house Monday night formally invited Mr. Carnegie to appear before it this week to tell what he knows about the steel industry and the possibility of the reduction of the tariff on iron and steel products.

The committee desires him to appear, temporarily, Wednesday, when the iron and steel schedule will be taken up in the hearing now being held by the committee looking toward a revision of the tariff. The hearings on the iron and steel rates will continue until Friday and if Mr. Carnegie finds is impossible to appear Wednesday the committee is anxious to hear him on Thursday or Friday.

Invitation to Ironmaster.

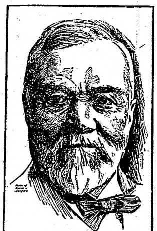
The telegram was as follows:



ANDREW CARNEGIE.

"Washington, Nov. 23, 1908.—Mr. Andrew Carnegie, New York City: This committee will have a hearing on the iron and steel schedule Wednesday, the twenty-fifth instant, and continuing Friday, the twenty-seventh. We would be very glad to have you appear before the committee on one of these days for instance, (temporarily on Wednesday), and give the committee such information as you are able upon the subject. The daily sessions commence at 9:30 a. m. Sereno E. Payne, chairman."

The members of the committee were a unit in refusing to discuss Mr. Carnegie's article, although all of them admitted having read it as published.

Tiles and Lime Considered.

Sitting in a long night session to consider the tariff schedules on tiles, lime, cement, carbons and kindred articles, the committee put in full time at work Monday.

In the course of the night session, H. L. Sheppard and Orin F. Perry of the Rockland-Rockport (Me.) Lime Company, were put through a grilling examination when they asked that the present duty of five cents a hundred pounds on lime be maintained.

Mr. Perry asserted that his company was organized in 1900, when seven or eight firms were purchased. He admitted the price of lime had advanced ever since.

Chairman Payne asked why his firm was the only one that demands a duty.

"Because we are so near to the Canadian manufacturers and because ours is the best made in the United States," he repeated.

"Why, we have the best in the world right in New York," declared Mr. Payne, with a show of state pride.

"Yes, we sell most of our product in New York," retorted Mr. Perry.

Using figures furnished him, Representative Clark figured out that the company is making 24 per cent. profit.

Official Vote of Kansas.

Topeka, Kan., Nov. 24.—The state canvassing board Monday finished its canvass of the election returns. The total vote cast in Kansas for president was 375,895, as follows: Taft, 197,166; Bryan, 161,209; Debs (Soc.), 12,420; Chafin (Pro.), 5,032; scattering, 68. Taft's plurality, 35,957. W. R. Stubbs (Rep.), vote for governor was 196,692; Botkin (Dem.), 162,385; Stubbs' plurality, 34,307. The two amendments submitted, one providing for increased pay for legislators and the other relating to pay of probate judges, were both overwhelmingly defeated.

Won't Exhibit Hunting Trophies.

Seattle, Wash., Nov. 24.—President Roosevelt will not make a display at the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition of the trophies of his African hunt next year. In reply to a formal request, sent two weeks ago, Secretary Loeb for the president has replied that it will be impossible to comply.

Two Minnesota Boys Drowned.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Official Figures.

Minneapolis.—Complete official figures on the state ticket were announced by Secretary of State Schmahl, after the belated returns from Big Stone and Hubbard counties had arrived. Governor Johnson's plurality, according to these figures, is 28,002, and his total vote larger by 7,000 than any candidate for governor has ever received.

Total vote cast, 355,263.

Necessary to carry amendments, 177,632.

No. 1, wide-open tax amendment—yes, 133,336; no, 65,774.

No. 2, good roads amendment—yes, 154,331; no, 56,248.

No. 3, hail insurance amendment—yes, 137,410; no, 62,253.

No. 4, county superintendent's amendment—yes, 158,483; no, 42,071.

Secretary of state—Schmahl, rep., 175,384; Lamb, dem., 96,561; Damon, pro., 15,257; Lefevre, p. o., 10,894; Waterston, ind., 2,038; Schmahl's plurality, 78,823.

State treasurer—Dinehart, rep., 178,468; Nelson, dem., 103,335; Kolu, p. o., 12,394; Nordloef, ind., 2,861; Dinehart's plurality, 75,133.

Railroad commissioners—Mills, rep., 144,641; Elmquist, rep., 139,760; Bjorge, dem., 85,857; Mee, dem., 81,392; Lindsay, pro., 20,776; Mills' plurality, 58,784; Elmquist's plurality, 53,923.

The official vote in the fifteenth judicial district is: Wright, rep., 8,155; Stanton, ind., 8,098; Wright's majority, 57.

Presidential Election.

St. Paul.—Minnesota's 11 presidential electors will meet at the state capitol in St. Paul on Monday, Jan. 11, to cast their ballots for William Howard Taft for president.

Aside from this wholly pleasant and formal act their most important duty will be to select one of their number to carry the vote of the state to the electoral college at Washington.

Naturally all of the electors are very anxious to make the trip, but the government permits only one to go, paying the expenses of the trip at the rate of 25 cents a mile. The bearer of the vote probably will be selected by placing 11 slips of paper in a hat, each slip bearing the name of one of the electors, and the lucky man will be picked by means of drawing.

Stewart Gamble of Gamble & Ludwig, druggists, Hennepin avenue and Third street, is the only one of the electors from this city, all the others, with the exception of John J. Ecklund of Duluth, being from country districts.

Millions of Cans.

Mankato.—During the season of 1908, 4,408,190 cans of vegetables and fruit were packed in the state of Minnesota, according to a report by Edward K. Slater, state dairy and food commissioner.

"Minnesota is the only state in the union that has a special law regulating canneries," says Mr. Slater. "It has been in operation two years and has been of great benefit. To this important industry, in addition to insuring the consumers of Minnesota canned goods, these products have been put up under the supervision of the state. Where so inspected the products may be labeled 'Minnesota Standard, inspected and approved.'"

King Corn took the honors as the leader, 2,824,390 cans, or more than half the season's output being devoted to this vegetable. Peas came next with 531,960 cans. Beans were third with 430,760 cans.

Burned to Death.

Worthington, Minn., Nov. 21.—Fire completely destroyed the large barn of Sam Stewart and Charles Gordon and slightly damaged nearby buildings. Albert Lestico lessee of the Stewart barn, while trying to rescue four blooded horses was overcome by smoke and burned to death. His body was later found completely charred. A strong wind threatened town with destruction. The property loss is estimated at $10,000, partially insured.

NEWS NOTES.

Minneapolis.—Miss Beulah Poynter, star, actress and author, will be seen at the Bijou the week of November 29th in her own dramatization of Mary J. Holmes' popular and widely read book, "Lena Rivers." The piece, as a play, is less than three years old, yet it leaped into such instant popularity that at one time there were three companies touring the country in it.

Crookston.—John McLean, aged 58 years committed suicide by jumping into the sluice way just south of the Crookston waterworks powerhouse. The suicide caused a tremendous sensation.

Mankato.—Judge Pfau sentenced Everett W. Evans to state's prison for three years and six months for stealing $3,000 in cash from Mary McLaughlin, a washerwoman.

Minneapolis.—Minneapolis is to have a freight car manufacturing plant that will employ 1,000 men with a monthly pay roll of $100,000.

Lena V. Henry, of Norristown, Ga., writes to Mrs. Pinkham:

"I suffered untold misery from female troubles. My doctor said an operation was the only chance I had, and I dreaded it almost as much as death.

"One day I read how other women had been cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I decided to try it. Before I had taken the first bottle I was better, and now I am entirely cured.

"Every woman suffering with any female trouble should take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

FACTS FOR SICK WOMEN.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has positively cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness or nervous prostration. Why don't you try it?

TO CURE A COUGH

Or Break a Cold in 24 Hours

Mix two ounces of Glycerine and a half ounce of Virgin Oil of Pine compound pure with a half pint of Straight Whisky. Shake well and take a teaspoonful every four hours.

The genuine Virgin Oil of Pine compound pure is prepared only by The Leach Chemical Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, and is put up only in half-ounce vials, each vial securely sealed in a round wooden case to insure its freshness and purity.

Perfect Philosophy.

We read of a certain Roman emperor who built a magnificent palace. In digging the foundation the workmen discovered a golden sarcophagus ornamented with three circlets, on which were inscribed: "I have expended; I have given; I have kept; I have possessed; I do possess; I have lost; I am punished. What I formerly expended I have; what I gave away, I have."—From the Gesta Romanorum.

MIX FOR RHEUMATISM

The following is a never failing remedy for rheumatism, and if followed up it will effect a complete cure of the very worst cases: "Mix one-half pint of good whiskey with one ounce of Toris Compound and add one ounce Syrup Sarsaparilla Compound. Take in tablespoonful doses before each meal and at bedtime." The ingredients can be procured at any drug store and easily mixed at home.

Remember what you possess in the world will be found at the day of your death to belong to some one else, but what you are will be yours forever.—Henry Van Dyke.

PE-RU-NA AS A LAST RESORT

MR. WM. F. VAHLBERG.

Mr. William F. Vahlberg, Oklahoma City, Okla., writes:

"One bottle of Peruna which I have taken did more toward relieving me of an aggravated case of catarrh of the stomach, than years of treatment with the best physicians.

"I had given up hopes of relief, and only tried Peruna as a last resort.

"I shall continue using it, as I feel satisfied it will effect an entire and permanent cure.

"I most cheerfully recommend Peruna to all who may read this."

Peruna is usually taken as a last resort. Doctors have been tried and failed. Other remedies have been used. Sanitariums have been visited. Travel has been resorted to.

At last Peruna is tried. Relief is found.

This history is repeated over and over again, every day in the year. It is such results as this that gives Peruna its unassailable hold upon the people. We could say nothing that would add force to such testimonials as the above. That people who have had catarrh and have tried every other remedy available, find relief in Peruna, constitutes the best argument that could be made.

Georgie of the Scribblers'

By Charles Garvice

(Copyright, by Bobbs-Merrill Co.)

The Scribblers' club was started some years ago. It is not a Bohemian club; rather it is a club consisting of men who work, if anything, a little too hard. It is a literary club pure and simple, and it is extremely comprehensive. Nearly all the well-known writers are members, though it is true some of them, the very great ones of the profession, do not visit us very frequently.

"Abandon conceit, all ye who enter here," might be written over our entrance door. But we are proud of each other, as proud of our failures as we are of our successes; and the Scribblers stick to each other as loyally as do the Freemasons. We are proud of Blossop, who is the athlete of the club, and we bear with him, when, with his broad back completely shutting out the fire, he delivers in a loud voice his dicta on all things upon the earth and the waters thereon; for Blossop has written the best short story in existence. We are proud of Percy Littleford, who, to the stranger, may seem only a small and peevish man with a pale face and a perpetual sneer; but we know that Littleford is a great scholar and a superb critic. We are proud of Millan, upon whom the casual observer would not bestow a second glance; but we know that though Millan wears shocking hats and ties that sear our eyeballs, he is a poet who will some day be discovered and acclaimed.

In fact, every one of us has done something which has entitled him to our respect, though the world at large may not yet have recognized the achievement.

The qualifications for membership at the Scribblers' are supposed to be somewhat severe; but Blossop says that any man who can read words of one syllable is entitled to put up, because he probably holds the book in his hand, and is therefore "connected with literature." Be that as it may, we were all rather astonished when Georgie joined us. His full name is Vavasour Montague de Courcy Jebling, and his father is the inspired genius who first thought of making pork pies—with jelly, and says so continually in every possible form of advertisement."

Millan brought V. M. de C. to one of the monthly dinners at the club; and the young fellow was so obviously delighted with the speeches and the rest of it, was so light-hearted and genial, that we all took a fancy to him, refrained from black-balling him when, at his urgent request, Millan put him up; and in a very short time had rechristened him with the friendly and familiar name by which alone he is known at the Scribblers'. He is an only son, indeed, an only child, and his father, who is exceedingly proud of him ("Good looking and altogether decent chap, Georgie; but don't any of you fools tell him so," said Blossop), makes him a liberal allowance, which Georgie dutifully and conscientiously spends twice over, with his father's approval.

In the early days of Georgie's membership at the Scribblers' he displayed a frantic desire to stand champagne on every possible occasion; but some of us delicately pointed out to him that we were more accustomed to the simple wine of Scotland, accompanied by the chastening soda, and that strange and unholy liquors were bad for literary men; also that, as a rule, we liked to pay for our own drinks. He took this and all the other hints — hints of pyramidal thickness and of bludgeon-like directness—in very good part; and all would have been well with Georgie if Skimball, who was suffering severely from "returned with thanks," had not taunted Georgie with never having "written anything except cheques."

Strangely enough the taunt stuck in Georgie's mind as the dart of a banderillo adheres to the bull. He went straight home and began to think—a dangerous thing for a light-hearted and delightfully brainless man like Georgie to do; and, worse still, he went on thinking, and as a result of the novel mental irritant wrote a "work of fiction!" It was—oh, my aunt, it was awful! He kept it dark until it was produced—of course, at the author's expense; and here followeth the deluge. Reviews, sarcastic, cynical, openly abusive, poured down on Georgie's curly hair. The worst, the most brutal of the notices was written by Littleford, the quiet, reserved Littleford, as honest as—as—singular, I can't think of any name at the moment!—a scholar, and an absolutely conscientious critic. I need not add that he was poor; that follows naturally enough. The review appeared in The Scarifier, and we all promptly showed it to Georgie, some of us with the truly charitable object of checking any further literary effort on his part. He looked rather rueful, but said nothing, drank a soda-and-whisky in comparative silence, and shortly afterward disappeared.

Two days later Blossop, with his back to the fire, looked 'round and remarked regretfully:

"Bad bit of business, this of Littleford's! Not heard of it? Really, you fellows seem to go about with your heads in bushel baskets!"

"Some of us require a two-bushel basket," interpolated Millan, glaring significantly at Blossop, who, after hurling parenthetically: "Swelled head yourself!" continued:

"Got the order of the sack from The Scarifier. They're not doing very well, cutting down expenses, and have found some one to take on Littleford's work for less money, I suppose. So the marriage is put off. Awfully pretty girl he's engaged to; met her and Littleford feeding the ducks in the park; told me all about it next day; idyllic story; I wept like a child. Yes, he's got the chuck."

There was a muttered chorus of "Beastly shame!" "Just like old Niggles, of the Scarifier; anything to save a shilling!" Poor little girl." "Not a bad chap, Littleford, though he's a monster when he's on the war-path." Then we passed to something else. Georgie had said nothing.

Littleford appeared at the club next day, and one of us ventured to express sympathy. He crimsoned and frowned:

"Oh, it's all right," he said, in his curt way; "they've taken me on again, for some reason or other."

"Then the marriage will come off, old man?"

"No; future too uncertain," he replied, shortly; and thereupon proceeded to cut the leaves of a book, preparatory to cutting up the author.

Time passed—if a more useful phrase than this exists, I can only say that I have not met with it—and, incredible as it may seem, Georgie produced another novel. More deluge! The Scarifier came out with a review which made the hair of some of us stand on end, and it was signed—the review, not the hair—"Percy Littleford."

Blossop asked him why he had stuck his name to it. Littleford regarded him grimly for a moment, and then replied:

"Because I discovered that it was Georgie who got me taken on again, and—I had to sign it."

"Oh! Well, I shouldn't be surprised if you now get the ultimate chuck," Blossop commented. "For sheer savagery, this article of yours takes the freehold of a biscuit factory."

We all agreed, for once, with Blossop; and our surprise was stupendous and paralyzing when he pranced into the club the following evening shouting, even more loudly than usual:

"Boys, the old Scarifier has changed hands! And—keep your mouth shut, Millan; I want to tell this standing outside—Littleford has got the editorial chair! And who do you think is the new proprietor? Stand tight! Hold on to something! It's—Georgie."

Georgie came in before we could avail ourselves of our limited knowledge of English, and was at once surrounded and threatened with several painful deaths, lucidly described in lurid language, unless he instantly explained. He looked shy, for the first time in his life, and stammered as he said:

"Well, I—I wanted to be something in the literary line, like you fellows in the club; and as the novel business didn't pan out very well—though, mind you! I don't think it was worse than some of the stuff you chaps write—I thought I'd buy a paper."

"But why, why choose Littleford for editor?" he was asked. "He is capable enough, of course; but those notices of his!"

"Well—I thought I'd like a straight up-and-down chap—"

"No man can be straight and an editor at the same time, you blithering idiot!"

"—And—and," added Georgie, stammering and blushing again, "I, too, saw 'em feeding the ducks. Such a jolly little girl! They're to be married next week, and I'm—I'm going to be the best man. I say, couldn't we have champagne on this occasion, just to drink their health? No? Oh, well! Whiskies all 'round, waiter, as usual!"

DOWN MISSOURI WAY

CANADA'S RESPECT FOR LAW AND ORDER THE SUBJECT FOR FAVORABLE COMMENT.

Those who have visited Canada are always impressed with the strict observance that is given to the laws of the country, and the order that is preserved everywhere. The editor of the Gazette, of Fulton, Nev., recently paid a visit to Western Canada. He was so impressed with the conditions that he saw everywhere, that on his return home he was inspired to write as follows: "Reverence and respect for law is a dominant characteristic of the Canadian people. Wherever one goes in Canada, whether east or west, the law is supreme. The law is obeyed because it is law, seemingly, and not because violation carries a penalty. Canada enforces the law and makes every law effective. No country is more free than Canada. In name Canada is a dependency of the British Crown. In fact, it is almost a third republic. All its taxes are voted, collected and expended by the Dominion and the provinces. The nominal head of the Government is the Governor General, appointed by the English Crown. Practically his only authority is to veto the acts of parliament, which he scarcely ever exercises. Canada gives nothing to the support of the English government or the English king. She gives England the advantage in trade regulations and tariff laws, and in return receives the protection of the British army and navy. Canada enjoys the protection without sharing in the expense.

"The sale of liquor is strictly regulated. None but hotel-keepers may obtain license to vend the stuff, and before a license can be secured an applicant must prove good character and provide twenty rooms in his tavern for the accommodation of guests. The bar-rooms close at 7 o'clock Saturday evening and remain closed until Monday morning. The schools and churches in Western Canada excite admiration. Though new, Western Canada is not godless. The finest buildings in every town are the churches. Next come the school houses."

Turning to the wheat fields of Western Canada, the editor of the Laurel (Neb.) Advocate of Sept. 17th says: "I have often thought that the reason that the characters of Charles Dickens are so impressed upon the minds of his readers is because he dwells upon them so long and describes them so minutely that by the time one has waded through his long drawn out stories they are so burned into his brain that he can never forget them. It was this way with the Canadian wheat fields. Had we only seen a few the memory of them might have worn away in time, but a long drawn out experience such as we had is sure to leave an uneffaceable impression. Never while we live shall we forget the Canadian wheat fields. They call it the granary of the British Empire, and we don't blame 'em. Nobody who has seen these wheat fields can wonder at their enthusiasm." It is worth while to record that these fields have now been harvested, and in many cases yields as high as forty and fifty bushels per acre have been marketed, while the general average has been away above 20 bushels per acre. Oats and barley have also done well, and the profits, the prices of grains being high, have paid the entire cost of the farms of many a farmer. There is now 160 acres of land given away, in addition to the 160 acres that the homesteader may purchase at $3.00 an acre. Particulars of this as well as the lowest railway rates will be given by the Canadian Government Agent.

OFFICIAL PAPER of RED LAKE COUNTY

Subscription price, $1.50 per year
If paid in advance, $1.00.

Entered at the Post-office in Plummer, Minn. as Second Class Mail Matter.

The official count of the ballots cast in the Ninth Congressional district shows that Congressman Steenerson's plurality is 3,047. So long, Ole.

Did it ever occur to you that a railroad is most apt to traverse a country where drainage and roads are being pushed? Their profits arise from the development of new areas, and they are looking for new communities that are progressive. Be progressive, and help yourself to some of the good things.

Say, Mr. Homesteader, if you should die would you rather leave your widow and children a well-drained farm that can be either used or sold, or leave them the slim sustenance to be derived from your present somewhat swampy land? Think it over; you will die some day, and the sooner you drain and develop your land, the better it will be for yourself and those dependent upon you.

Don't lose your nerve. Even the devil hates a quitter. Stay by your proposition and it will richly recompense you for your fealty. Your land, properly developed with good roads and drainage, is worth more than Red River Valley land. Drainage is like a good milk cow—pays for itself in increased earnings—and while it pays its way your land will double in value. Don't let any croaker bluff you into the idea that you are a frog and have to live in a swamp.

OLD VILLAGE LOCKUP.

Quaint Structures For Confinement of Rogues and Vagabonds.

Several villages in the midlands possess in more or less ruined state their old parish lockups, commonly known as roundhouses.

Breedon, a Leicestershire village, close to the South Derbyshire border, possesses its "lockup," a quaint stone building eighteen feet high and eight feet six inches diameter inside. The walls are fifteen inches thick. The door is of stout oak, studded with many large iron nails.

The lock is very strong, and the keyhole is covered with an iron plate, which itself has to be unlocked by a spanner before the door key can be inserted. Ventilation is afforded by small holes punched in an iron plate, six inches by seven, fixed in the center of the door. There is no window.

At Worthington, the next village to Breedon, the old lockup is a seven sided brick building, badly in need of restoration, an opportunity for archaeologists which it is hoped will not be missed. Both at Breedon and Worthington these diminutive disused prisons are on the roadside adjacent to the pound, or pinfold, so that the constable had conveniently side by side the strayed cattle and any human rogues or vagabonds he had charge of. There are similar old lockups at Smisby and Ticknall, two villages close to Leicestershire.—Sheffield (England) Telegraph.

BLUSH IF YOU CAN.

It Is a Sign of an Active Brain, Declares a Scientist.

Sir Arthur Mitchell, K. C. B., of Edinburgh, who knows much that is strange about dreams, laughter and other commonplace human characteristics, has advanced the consoling theory that blushing is an achievement of which every one who can blush should be proud.

He says it requires brains to blush idiots cannot blush; neither can animals. Sir Arthur calls attention to the fact that tiny infants do not blush, although they learn to at an early age—just as soon, in fact, as the brain begins to exercise its functions. In blushing, he says, the mind always must be affected. It is always and only a bodily expression of a mental state.

It is a natural thing for a blusher to say that he had tried not to blush. No individual blushes of his own free will. The blush arises without call instantaneously and vanishes almost as quickly. Neither for its coming nor its going is there any exercise of volition. It is controlled, Sir Arthur says, solely by the brain and is a positive sign that there is an active brain there.—New York World.

Boissier's High Priced Autograph.

A good Boissier-Renan anecdote is told by a French paper One day Boissier arrived at Renan's home with a beaming face, saying: "Now I'll tell you a piece of news that will humiliate you. My autograph has fetched a higher price than yours." "That does not surprise me," Renan said serenely. "And where did you hear this?" It then turned out that at an auction a day or two before a Renan autograph had been sold for 3 francs and a Boissier for 5. "Well," Renan went on, "now let me tell you the reason. There were three faults in the spelling of your letter, which is now lying here on my writing table. A friend of mine was at the auction and made a higher bid for the letter after noticing the artificial gems that adorned your prose. He brought it to me in order that I might return it to you instead of reaching the public, which might get a bad impression of the accomplishments of members of the French academy."

Social Analogy.

Mrs. Subbubs—That Mrs. Newcome just moved into the Dudley's old house on Saturday, so I called today. Mr. Subbubs—Well, well, how like poker this social game is! Mrs. Subbubs—How do you mean? Mr. Subbubs—Why, in poker you also "call" when you want to see what the other person's got.—Philadelphia Press.

THE ACT OF DYING.

Reasons For Believing That It Is an Easy Matter.

The mere ultimate process of dying may be a relatively easy matter. Any person who has been long ill probably suffers more on any given day of his life than he will suffer in the act of departing from his body. It is probable that a broken bone, a delirious fever, a disordered vital organ, may cause more anguish than the final struggle. I have my doubts whether the last pang is as bad as it seems, declares Elizabeth Stuart Phelps in Harper's Bazar. We are told by surgeons that chloroformed patients may give apparent evidence of acute agonies which they do not feel. Death itself is often an anaesthetic so merciful that what people call "living trouble" is obviously a worse matter.

I, for instance, who have never fainted and never been anaesthetized in my life, have twice become from serious causes unconscious for a short time, and I have often wished that I could make over to some recoiling soul whose name has been heard ringing upon the last roll call the unspeakable comfort which that brief experience has given me. There was no pang, no terror, no time, no chance, for either. One seemed to glide gently and swiftly down a warm abyss, flower scented, grass grown, safe and beneficent, into unutterable content. One melted into peace. One drifted into ecstasy beside which the deepest joys of consciousness are poor, pale things.

If one in truth should evade the body in such a moment, death would stand chosen as the supreme delight of living.

HIS THREE WIVES.

They Were All In One Picture, but Did Not Stay There.

Allan Cunningham in his "Lives of British Painters" tells a story of Copley, the father of Lord Chancellor Lyndhurst, which reveals what a portrait painter endures from the vanity and eccentricity of his sitters.

A certain man had himself, his wife and seven children painted by Copley in a family piece.

"It wants but one thing," said the man on seeing the finished picture, "and that is the portrait of my first wife. This one is my second."

"But," replied the artist, "she is dead. What can I do? She must come in as an angel."

"Oh, no; no angels for me. She must come in as a woman."

The portrait was added, but several months elapsed before the man again called at Copley's studio, and when he did a strange lady held on to his arm.

"I must have another sketch from your hand, Copley," said he. "An accident befell my second wife. This lady is my third, and she has come to have her likeness included in the family picture."

The painter introduced the likeness of wife No. 3, and the man expressed himself satisfied with the portraits of his three spouses. But the lady remonstrated. Never was such a thing heard of. Her predecessors must go. The artist painted them out. Then the man disputed the price. Copley sued him, and his son, the future Lord Lyndhurst, signalized his call to the bar by gaining his father's cause.

A Quaint Critic.

A noted woman teacher once spoke before a class of school children on literature. She had spent a week writing the speech. She read it to the little ones, as she hoped, with great success, but the next day she heard that a boy on being asked by his mother what had happened at the school replied carelessly:

"Oh, nothing much, except that a lady talked to herself on a piece of paper."

Just the Contrary.

Bessie was just finishing her breakfast as papa stooped to kiss her before going downtown. The little one gravely took up her napkin and wiped her cheek

"What, Bessie," said her father "wiping away papa's kiss?"

"Oh, no," said she, looking up with a sweet smile; "I's wubbing it in."

Marlin

For shooting the swift flying, heavily feathered ducks and geese the Marlin 12-gauge repeating shotgun has no superior. This gun is exceedingly strong in construction and yet is not heavy. It is bored to throw an excellent pattern with great penetration. The solid top keeps out the weather and the brush and twigs of the blind, and the side ejector prevents the empty shells from being a nuisance to the shooter. It's the best bad weather gun.

The Marlin 12-gauge is suited to all forms of bird and trap shooting, and for durability, strength and ease of action is unexcelled. Made for both black and smokeless powders and for heavy loads. Two separate extractors make sure work.

Will Travel During Winter.

Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Mayfield and daughter Zola were here on Wednesday to say farewell to their numerous friends and left on the evening train for Richland Centre, Wis., where they will visit with friends and relatives for a while and then go for a trip through the south. Mr. Mayfield came into this part of the country over four years ago and settled on a quarter section of land in section 6 of the township which was subsequently named Mayfield in his honor. He was a great hustlar and took an active interest in the development of the country. He was a live proposition at every turn and will be greatly missed in this vicinity. He sold out his real estate interests on account of poor health and overwork for his years. After travelling he may decide to return to this vicinity and if he does he will be gladly received as a tried and valued member of the community. The best wishes of a lot of friends go with him and his estimable family from here wherever he may go or decide to remain.

J. O. Sargent came up from Crookston last Saturday morning and remained until Tuesday visiting with his daughter, Mrs. Chas. W. Latta.

Elleck Halvorson was in Thursday from his home out near Hilda and found time to make this office a brief visit. He says that deer hunters were very plentiful out his way but that very few deer were killed.

Drop Siding, Flooring or any kind of fine finished lumber can now be had at the S. P. K. Lumber, Cedar & Tie Co's mill yard in Plummer. You dont have to pay trust prices if you buy your lumber from this company.

Estray—About October 14th there came to my place and was taken up by me one red heifer calf about 6 months old. Owner can have same by paying expenses of keeping and this advertisment. Andrew Ydstie, SE ¼ section 15, Gervais township.

P. L. Wojnarowski and Ed Kolski were in from Radney on Thursday to attend to some business matters. Mr. Wojnarowski is one of the hustlers from his section of the country and a few days ago purchased a team for work on his farm and paid $300 for them.

John L. Larson was up from Cannon Falls this week looking after matters on the Ryland farm in Garnes town ship, which is now owned by C. O. Anderson, a son-in-law of Mr. Larson's. While here he rented the farm for another year to Anton Pederson, who has had it for the past yerr.

Peter Hanson, of Kenmare, N. D., was a visitor here last week and was the guest of John J. Brekke. Mr. Hanson is the owner of 200 acres of land in this township and was here for the purpose of looking over his property aa well as visiting with friends. He returned home on Saturday evening.

Estray—A bay mare about 3 years old, with small white star in forehead came to my place and was taken up by me on Sunday, Nov. 23rd. Said mare has one thick hind leg. Owner can have same by calling and proving property and paying all expenses, including this notice. Helmer Frederickson, Section 24, Gervais township.

Mayfield Murmurs.

Mr. and Mrs. Christ Nodland, of Malone, are the happy parents of a baby girl born on Sunday last. Mother and child are doing nicely.

A number of friends gathered at the home of Sever Grothe last Sunday and had a very pleasant time in social discussion of current events.

August Larson, one of the popular Mayfield bachelors, has just completed building a fine new barn. He put on a good weather proof roof so that his stock will not suffer from the winter storms.

News has been scarce from this place for a long time now. The reason is that the correspondent has been quite busy and has been away most of the time. From now on the news will come regularly every week.

A number of the members of Ebenezer Congregation got together last Friday for the purpose of fixing up the burying ground. The tract was all fenced in and was leveled up nicely by breaking the ground.

The ditching machine has been busy this fall making an improvement that will be a great benefit to the farmers. A new ditch has been made that runs in a southwesterly direction from Malone to the Clearwater river.

Nearly all the young folks aronnd here have gone to Thief River Falls to attend the High School during the winter months. That's right, boys and girls, go to school and get an education. That is the best you will have in this world.

R. O. Gorden and Ole Reiersgaard left last Saturday for Waukon, in Norman county, for a visit with their brother Eivind, who is going to quit farming there and go to North Dakota to take up his residence on his homestead.

Nels Johnson was over here the other day from Equality and purchased a nice bunch of cattle from Charley Johnson and Carl Magnell. Mr. Johnson intends to go into dairying and patronize the creamery so as to get the best results from his farming.

Ladies Will Do Honors.

There is a few young ladies here in Plummer who have been gradually working up the necessary nerve to make some propositions to the members of the other sex before the leap year expires. This process of development has culminated in the announcement that they will give a grand Leap Year Ball at Carlson's hall on the evening of Saturday, the 12th inst. The ladies are going to do the honors in proper style and have extended a general invitation to unmarried ladies to attend the ball and each bring a gentleman. The fair promoters of the dance will extend a warm welcome to the visitors from out of town and expect to be able to have a bunch of bachelors penned up for the benefit of any lonely maiden who may not be able to capture one elsewhere. They will do things right and it's a cinch that the ball will be the biggest kind of a success.

A CASTELLANE PIRATE.

Took Sultan's Library and Demanded Ransom For Its Return.

In 1611 Jean Philip de Castellane was commander of the French man-of-war Notre Dame de la Garde. Henry IV. sent him to Morocco to demand of the sultan the release of certain French prisoners. De Castellane carried his negotiations to a successful conclusion, and the sultan as a peace offering sent to the French commander twenty Arabian horses for the king "Just as the Notre Dame was about to weigh anchor the pretender to the Moroccan throne gained a decisive victory, and the sultan decided to flee for his life. He engaged passage for himself and harem on a Dutch merchantman and to De Castellane he intrusted his library, one of the most extensive collections of Arabic manuscripts and books in existence. The great Mulay Ahmed was the founder of the library.

"Arriving at the place of rendezvous, Commander de Castellane sent word to the sultan that he could have his library for 3,000 ducats, the price of transportation.

"The sultan protested that he had made no such agreement and that besides he did not have the money to pay the demand, whereupon De Castellane sailed away.

"He had not gone very far when a great storm overtook the Notre Dame and drove her, a wreck, upon the African coast at Casablanca, then occupied by the king of Spain, who was at war with Morocco. The Spaniards seized the library and shipped it to Spain, where it was placed in a wing of the Escurial. What remains of the library can be seen today in an alcove labeled the Arabian collection."—Florence (Italy) Journal.

Getting It Right.

"In your paper this morning, sir, you called me a 'bum actor.' I want an explanation."

"I shall be happy to explain, young man. That word 'actor' was inserted by the proofreader, who thought I had omitted it accidentally. I shall take care that it doesn't happen again."—Chicago Tribune.

Pumps.

"Women," declared she, "have bigger intellects than men."

"I won't dispute it," responded he. "A man can't wear footgear that has to be kept on by mental power alone."—Kansas City Journal.

THE CHARM OF ISLANDS.

What Is Missed by Those Who Live Far From the Sea.

No men of the world are so to be pitied, I think, as those who dwell far from the sea. They shall never know but a piece of life. A plain, to be sure, is very well. It responds delicately enough to the humor of the seasons, changing from green to gold, from gold to dun, from dun to white. It has, too, its moods, its laughters, its melancholies, its rushings of the wind, its illimitability of the dark. A hill, though, is better—that is, a hill that looks across a plain, never one that is huddled among its fellows, for there one is caught like a beetle in a cup. A hill gives one a sense of freedom and a perspective upon the world. It is something to look down on the parquetry of field and town and wood and stream, to keep vigil upon the drama woven invisibly below one's eyes. And it has moments—a hill: certain nights of stars, certain bursts of storm, certain iridescent afternoons, when the whole tragedy of autumn is unrolled at one's feet.

But above all else in the world give me an island! There is your true microcosmos! There you hold in your hand, as it were, the essence and epitome of the universe. Your own earth spreads under your feet. Your own sky hangs over your head. Your own sea encircles you. Your own portion of life is meted out to you day by day, distinct from that of other men. For not the least charm of an island is its privacy. An islet, of course, I mean—one from which you may catch the glint of water on every side. Otherwise your island is no better than a pasture. Whether you be a hermit or whether you have a book of verses underneath the bough—and the requisite concomitants—or whatever be your personal circumstances, you are yet divided from a hostile or indifferent world. You are at liberty to feel and to test your own personality. You are not overborne by the rush of humanity which is the burden of terra firma.—Scribner's Magazine.

Honor.

"What they call 'honor' is a mighty curious thing," observed Uncle Jerry Peebles. "I know a man who would cheerfully starve himself to pay a gambiln' debt, and he still owes the preacher that married him twenty-seven years ago."—Chicago Tribune.

A Dangerous Case of Kidney Complaint and How It Was Checked.

Mrs. Lucy Quebeck, Mechanic St., Hope Valley, R. I., says: "Eight years ago I contracted severe kidney trouble and my back began to ache continually. Every day it seemed worse. The least pressure on my back tortured me, and I could not stoop without a bad twinge. The kidney secretions passed irregularly with pain, and I bloated badly. My head swam and spots flitted before my eyes. One doctor said I was incurable. However, I found prompt relief when I started using Doan's Kidney Pills, and the troubles I have related gradually disappeared."

Diversion in the Country.

"I visited E. R. Thomas and found him doing well after his motor accident," said a member of the Automobile Club of America. "Thomas, as usual, railed against our bad roads.

"He said that a friend who lived in the country had been to see him.

"'The country is all right in the summer,' Thomas admitted, 'but in the fall and winter don't you find it dull?'

"'Dull?' said the other. 'No, indeed. Why, out our way some motor car or other gets stuck in the mud every night.'"

At the Riding School.

"Why? What difference does it make?"

"It's the rule."

"But why should it be the rule?"

"Because in the past horsemen wore swords. They wore them on the left hip. Hence, had they mounted on the right side, the sword would have got in the way. So they mounted on the left, and we still mount on the left. Horses are accustomed to it, and if you try to get up from the right you are liable to be kicked."

Smile's Face Value.

Although most of us would hesitate to express what might be termed the face value of the "modern smile," we certainly realize at times that it is a form of currency which is depreciating. In the "modern smile" we recognize the crude, official thing which neither illuminates, cheers nor bridges awful gaps of silence. It may savor of suggesting a wave of imbecility to declare that we ought all to smile more, but it is certainly true that the charm of a woman's smile was once esteemed even above beauty.

Capitol Reflects Nation.

Every great nation is proud of its capitol. Every great state in the union has lavished millions of dollars in the adornment of its capitol. Every important city, which is a miniature commonwealth, should have a noble capitol, or city hall. In the chief building of a municipality is carried on the business which concerns every citizen.—Troy Record.

Glow of Health Speaks for Postum.

It requires no scientific training to discover whether coffee disagrees or not.

Simply stop it for a time and use Postum in place of it, then note the beneficial effects. The truth will appear.

"Six years ago I was in a very bad condition," writes a Tenn. lady, "I suffered from indigestion, nervousness and insomnia.

"I was then an inveterate coffee drinker, but it was long before I could be persuaded that it was coffee that hurt me. Finally I decided to leave it off a few days and find out the truth.

"The first morning I left off coffee I had a raging headache, so I decided I must have something to take the place of coffee." (The headache was caused by the reaction of the coffee drug—caffeine.)

"Having heard of Postum through a friend who used it, I bought a package and tried it. I did not like it at first but after I learned how to make it right, according to directions on pkg., I would not change back to coffee for anything.

"When I began to use Postum I weighed only 117 lbs. Now I weigh 170 and as I have not taken any tonic in that time I can only attribute my recovery of good health to the use of Postum in place of coffee.

"My husband says I am a living advertisement for Postum. I am glad to be the means of inducing my many friends to use Postum, too."

NORD ALEXIS FLEES FOR REFUGE

THE PRESIDENT OF PORT AU PRINCE TAKES REFUGE ON FRENCH GUNBOAT.

He Was Compelled to Flee Because of Threatening Mobs. Gen. Legitime is Proclaimed Ruler Awaiting Gen. Simon.

Port au Prince, Dec. 3.—President Nord Alexis has been deposed and is now safe on board the French training ship Duguay Trouin, and Port au Prince is in the hands of the revolutionists. Gen. Antoine Simon, the leader of the insurgents is marching up the peninsula with an army of 5,000 and a new president, Gen. Legitime has been proclaimed.

At the last moment President Alexis yielded to the urging of those about him and decided to take refuge aboard the French warship. At precisely 5 o'clock a salute of twenty-one guns announced his departure from the palace.

Thousands had gathered there early in the day and they surged around the entrances, threatening to tear down the walls to drive out the president and his loyal followers.

As the hours passed the great mob became infuriated, shouting for him to leave the country.

So serious was the situation that the French minister, M. Carteron, and other foreign representatives, together with the members of the special committee forced themselves upon the president, who finally consented to withdraw.

Shouts greeted him as he stepped from the precincts of the palace and into the carriage that had already been provided.

M. Carteron, carrying the French tri-color sat beside him and the minister threw the folds of the flag over the shoulders of the deposed president, to protect him.

All the way to the wharf the people who lined the streets shouted, jeered and cursed at the fallen president. The scene was tragic and shameful. One woman attempted to stab the president.

FIRED ON THE FLAG.

Superior Man While Angry Shoots the Stars and Stripes.

Superior, Wis., Nov. 27.—Great excitement was created yesterday morning at the corner of Fourteenth street and Tower avenue, when George M. Marter in a fit of passion against the United States postoffice department fired three charges of buckshot at the American flag above the federal building.

He was soon taken into custody by police, and is now held at police headquarters pending an investigation before Judge Larson of the probate court for insanity.

As a motive for his unpatriotic act, Marter explained to the police that he was justly angry with the postoffice department, which he claimed had been opening his mail.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

MATTERS OF INTEREST IN THE GOPHER STATE.

Democrats Show Their Election Finances. Gross Earnings Decision. Fatalities.

Democratic Fund.

St. Paul.—Although the state law does not require the state central committees to file expenditures for the gubernatorial campaign, Fred B. Lynch, treasurer of the democratic state committee, filed such a statement with the auditor of Ramsey county showing that it cost $18,013 to re-elect Governor John A. Johnson, leaving a debt of $1,685.

The name of Thomas W. Lawson of Boston, who favored Governor Johnson for the democratic presidential candidate, heads the list with a contribution of $1,000. Governor Johnson himself gave $500. Only the names of those who contributed more than $100 were mentioned in the statement, the smaller contributions merely being mentioned by amounts. Aside from the Lawson contribution, the statement shows the following donations:

Fred B. Lynch, $1,000; R. T. O'Connor, $1,000; Frank A. Day, $500; John F. Burchard, $500; Fred Wheaton, $900; John E. King, $200; Fred L. Ryan, $500; P. H. Nelson, $500; Gustav Carlson, $500; B. F. Nelson, $500; F. B. Jenney, $500; Otto Bremer, $200; D. Eberle, $250; R. J. Schiffman, $250; W. U. Winston, $200; Gustav Scholle, $500; Governor John A. Johnson, $500; W. W. Webber, $200; O. A. Robertson, $500; W. F. Kelso, $150; S. H. Wolfe, $25.

Several small donations netted $5,000, and donations of less than $100 amounted to $4,238.84. At the opening of the campaign there was $2,022.52 on hand, left by the 1906 committee.

Minnesota.

Minneapolis.—The first definition of "gross earnings" in the history of the state was given by the supreme court yesterday morning in a suit of the state against the Minnesota & International Railway company for taxes on unreported earnings. The state wins on a majority of its claims, and those involving the largest amount of money, and in the establishment of the principles will enable the state to collect thousands of dollars from a number of the thirty-five railroads doing business in the state.

The decision says that the earnings of a railroad, for the purposes of taxation, should not be confined to the returns on the actual traffic earnings. The lower court gave the state taxes upon two items involved in the suit and the higher court adds eight additional items in the seventeen claimed by the state.

The court holds that the road in addition to its receipts for transportation should pay taxes on receipts from lumber companies for loading cars for the companies, for the use of railway equipment by construction concerns and for the use of work trains by other roads. Income derived from interest on deposits, from the sale of old material and what might have been received from charging for hauling its own supplies, is not taxable.

Wages Are Increased.

St. Cloud.—More than half of the union men in the state received an increase in remuneration during the past two years, according to a report being prepared by Frank Hoffman of the state labor department.

Members of 140 unions to the number of 19,000 received an increase of 2 to 20 per cent in pay and 1,451 men had a reduction in their hours. There were 3,055 workers who received both an increase in pay and had their hours shortened. Only four unions reported a decrease in pay.

The union men raised $296,357 during the period for disbursement in aid of other members. Of this amount $199,550 was for strike benefits. Funeral expenses consumed $80,000 and $24,699 was expended in sick benefits.

Accidents.

St. Paul.—Only 44 persons were accidentally killed this year, against 72 in 1907 and 74 in 1906. The number of injured also shows a falling off, the number for 1908 being 57, against 87 in 1907 and 70 in 1906.

Over half the fatal accidents happened in the state of Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois and Michigan, the number in these states being 8, 8, 7 and 5, respectively.

NEWS NOTES.

St. Cloud.—Mrs. Frank Dueber was probably fatally injured by her twenty-year-old son, Bernard Dueber, in a row in this city.

Minneapolis.—One of A. H. Wood's successful melodramas, entitled "The Creole Slave's Revenge," will be the attraction at the Bijou the week of December 13th, and every effort has been made to imbue the play with true southern flavor.

Minneapolis.—The Twin City Rapid Transit company will be required to pay $18,279 as its share of the expenses of sprinkling and caring for the streets in Minneapolis for the season of 1908.

Duluth.—In a temporary fit of insanity Page Champagne leaps from train and vanishes, leaving no trace of his whereabouts; relatives fear he has perished in the woods.

Minneapolis.—The Minnesota State Horticultural society held its forty-second annual meeting last week in Minneapolis, from Dec. 1 to 4.

This woman says that sick women should not fail to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as she did.

Mrs. A. Gregory, of 2355 Lawrence St., Denver, Col., writes to Mrs. Pinkham:

"I was practically an invalid for six years, on account of female troubles. I underwent an operation by the doctor's advice, but in a few months I was worse than before. A friend advised Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it restored me to perfect health, such as I have not enjoyed in many years. Any woman suffering as I did with backache, bearing-down pains, and periodic pains, should not fail to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

FACTS FOR SICK WOMEN.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has positively cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness or nervous prostration. Why don't you try it?

160 ACRES IN FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

As further inducement to settlement of the wheat-raising lands of Western Canada, the Canadian Government has increased the area that may be taken by a homesteader to 320 acres—160 free and 160 to be purchased at $3.00 per acre. These lands are in the grain-raising area, where mixed farming is also carried on with unqualified success. A railway will shortly be built to Hudson Bay, bringing the world's markets a thousand miles nearer these wheat-fields, where schools and churches are convenient, climate excellent, railways close to all settlements, and local markets good.

MADE ROACHES HIS FRIENDS.

Act of Artemus Ward That Had Far Reaching Effect.

George V. Kelcey, a veteran journalist of Cleveland, remembers Artemus Ward well.

"Ward called on me," he said the other day, "the night before one of his panorama lectures. There were some three or four large roaches scurrying about my room, and they attracted his attention.

"'I am very fond of roaches,' he said. 'Once, in my own home, I found a roach struggling in a bowl of water. I took a half walnut shell and put him in it; it made a good boat; I gave him a couple of toothpicks for oars. Next morning I saw that he had fastened a hair to one of the toothpicks, and had evidently been fishing. Then, overcome with exhaustion, he had fallen asleep. The sight moved me. I took him out, washed him, gave him a spoonful of boiled egg, and let him go. That roach never forgot my kindness, and now my home is full of roaches.'"

Not Open to Everybody.

"A must peculiar effect was produced by an announcement in the advertisements of a county fair to be held in my state," says Congressman Champ Clark. "Among other things, the announcement said that 'attractive features of this great fair will be highly amusing donkey races and pig races.' Then, to the amazement of the judicious, this note was added: 'Competition in these two contests will be open to citizens of the county only!'"—Lippincott's.

ED GEERS, "The grand old man," he is called for he is so honest handling horses in races. He says: "I have used SPOHN'S DISTEMPER CURE for 12 years, always with best success. # Novelties for Christmas Presents

Blotting Pad with Fancy Corners.

Some sheets of white blotting paper laid on a piece of heavy cardboard covered with bright-colored wall paper or cretonne, make a pretty blotter. Corners of the double paper or cretonne keep the blotting paper in place.

Paper Owls.

Comical paper owls are made of plain brown tissue paper, crinkled by passing through the hands a number of times. Stuff with wadding, and tie at each end. Cut one end in a point for the tail. Leave the other end wide and square for the head. Sew shoe buttons on circles of yellow cloth outlined with black, for eyes. Attach the owls to a twig. Made in three sizes, the birds look like a little family. An effect of plumage is gained by using dark water colors, marking all over the body.

Jewel Cabinet.

An ingenious little article is a jewel basket, made of a square box, fitted with pill box drawers, each having a passe partout ring for a handle. It is covered with pink or blue silk and is a dainty accessory for a dressing table.

Snap-Shot Album.

This is made of heavy gray paper, with covers of gray cardboard or of soft leather. It may be ornamented with any suitable quotation.

Box for Ball of Twine.

Twine holders are circular boxes covered with leather or linen, in deep colors. Little match boxes that are very charming for men's tables are made of the ordinary match boxes that come by the dozen, with a piece of stiffened velvet and a little gold paint along the edges, folded about it and glued in place to represent a little velvet book.

TOP STAR FOR THE CHRISTMAS TREE

Cut out of a piece of cardboard the form of a five-pointed star five inches long. Cover with gold leaf or silver leaf. For the rays of light take about 15 broom straws, dip them in gold or silver paint and paste them back of the star in bunches of three. Take a piece of writing paper, roll it into a stiff roll, fasten one end to a twig and paste the other end at the back of the star. The star may then be arranged at the top of the tree.

Idea for the Christmas Table.

A new idea for a Christmas table is a Jack Horner bell. It may be hung from the chandelier by a splashing bow of scarlet ribbon. The bell is made of red tissue paper, the bottom of which is securely pasted over with stout paper. Scarlet ribbons are stretched from the bell to the plates, and at a signal from the hostess, given by the tinkling of a little invisible bell, the ribbons are pulled and on the end of each is a souvenir.

DRESSING THE CHRISTMAS TREE

An Occasion of Great Joy for Both Young and Old.

The happiest and most exciting time at Christmas for young and old is when the tree beams forth in all its glory and splendor. There is great pleasure for the elders in dressing it in its gayest raiment. If the full beauty is to be brought out it should be kept until night. It is said that 150,000 Christmas trees will be brought into the American market. Hemlock, cedar, pine and spruce are all good for the purpose. The base can be covered with cotton batting sprinkled with diamond dust, and every branch may be laden down with the same artificial snow. Incandescent electric lights are becoming more popular each year as they are safer. However, many prefer the twinkling of the candles. Colored balls and tinsel are draped from every branch, and gayly dressed dolls and toys of all sorts sway in the air. Then there must be cornucopias of red and gold, filled with candy. The largest presents and mysterious packages can be heaped around the foot of the tree. Every package should be wrapped in white paper and tied with brilliant red ribbon. Many dollars are spent each year for elaborate decorations, but many attractive and effective ornaments may be made at home, such as strings of popcorn, cranberries, gilded and silver nuts, paper flowers, etc., which all add to the splendor of the Christmas tree.

Doing Up the Gifts.

A new way of doing up gifts which will please all, and particularly delight the children, is to use white tissue paper for wrappers, and, instead of tying with ribbon, fasten the paper in place by using small seals over the edges where they are folded down. The seals come specially for the purpose and are decorated with tiny sprays of holly. If you are sending off a Christmas box put a layer of white tissue paper or white cotton on top of the packages and over this sprigs of holly or mistletoe.

Let Children Make Cards.

Have a large box at hand to drop in pictures, fancy papers, scraps of ribbon, and so on to give the children to make Christmas cards. You will be surprised at their ingenuity.

BREAKS A COLD PROMPTLY

The following formula is a never failing remedy for colds:

One ounce of Compound Syrup of Sarsaparilla, one ounce Toris Compound and one-half pint of good whiskey, mix and shake thoroughly each time and use in doses of a tablespoonful every four hours.

This if followed up will cure an acute cold in 24 hours. The ingredients can be gotten at any drug store.

WAS VERY FULLY OCCUPIED.

Situation in Which Bibulous Irishman Had His Hands Full.

Some one asked George B. Cortelyou, secretary of the treasury, if he intended becoming a candidate for governor of New York. Now, Mr. Cortelyou had an especial aversion for leading questions, so he answered by telling the following story:

Two Irishmen celebrated St. Patrick's day and started home together, but became separated. Finally they discovered themselves hugging lamp posts on opposite sides of the street.

"How are yez, Pat?" called Mike.

"Fair," says Pat, "how are yez?"

"I dunno," says Mike; "come over and see."

"I can't come," says Pat.

"Why can't yez?" says Mike.

"I've got me hands full shtayin' where I am," says Pat.—N. Y. Herald.

BAD ITCHING HUMOR.

Limbs Below the Knees Were Raw—Feet Swollen—Sleep Broken—Cured in 2 Days by Cuticura.

"Some two months ago I had a humor break out on my limbs below my knees. They came to look like raw beefsteak, all red, and no one knows how they itched and burned. They were so swollen that I could not get my shoes on for a week or more. I used five or six different remedies and got no help, only when applying them the burning was worse and the itching less. For two or three weeks the suffering was intense and during that time I did not sleep an hour at a time. Then one morning I tried a bit of Cuticura. From the moment it touched me the itching was gone and I have not felt a bit of it since. The swelling went down and in two days I had my shoes on and was about as usual. George B. Farley, 50 South State St., Concord, N. H., May 14, 1907."

AFFECTING SIGHT.

Cook (to her friend)—The proposal that the widower made me was really very moving. He brought his four children with him, and they all knelt before me.

The Dissatisfied.

The happy people in the world are those who enjoy what they have. Those for whom nothing is good enough are neither fit for earth nor would be satisfied in heaven. Here they are restless. There their halos would be damp or would not set straight. The third domain, which rhymes with well, would not be well for them, for the best would be too invariable or attending to fires would be too monotonous.

Catarrh Cannot Be Cured

with LOCAL APPLICATIONS, as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing catarrh. Send for testimonials, free.

Looks to us as tho Bruzzi buzzed around that little Elkins girl until he got her "going south" and then he took a hike for the north pole. But there's a bunch of old bachelors who dont care much any way. Here's to you, Bruzzi, and succes to your north pole trip. May you get there—and stay.

Congressman Steenerson has gone to Washington to be in attendance at the opening of the coming session of congress. This will be a short session, terminating on March 4th by limitation of law, and will be devoted mostly to making appropriations for the support of the government. Congressman Steenerson is a strong advocate of the postal savings bank, the development of swamp lands by federal and state drainage, and the opening of our natural waterways, but there is little likelihood of his being able to accomplish any thing along these lines at this session.

AUSTRALIAN RAIN.

When It Does Fall It Pours Down In a Perfect Flood.

How different things are in the old world from what they are in the far-away tropics!

"They had no rain here for a fortnight, and they called it a drought!" wrote an Australian from Scotland in a scornfully superior tone calculated to induce the belief that it never rains in Australia and that droughts last a hundred years. Not so. Australia is the land of contrasts. A drought has lasted for seven years. But what is there even in Scotland to compare with the persistency of Australian rain when it does see fit to fall?

For eleven weeks without stopping did the rain continue to moisten the dry places of Sydney some years ago, washing out most cruelly the brief, bright season of winter, when the Australian looks for living instead of existence and peace instead of pressure. And what rain! It shot from the clouds like arrows, and the whole world was a battlefield during that July. As the arrows darted into the earth the earth rose and dashed into the air, and rain and mud met and grappled with each other day after day, night after night, week after week. And the battle was neither to the rain nor to the mud. A strange and horrid situation arrived. Sydney ran clean out of galoches.

For two weeks not a galoche was to be had in the rain drenched city for love or money. Then a fresh shipload arrived from somewhere or other. And then—the rain stopped!—London Mail.

One Trouble After Another.

"I have just found out about the woman opposite me after two years of mystery and anxiety," said the flat dweller. "She is a pretty, fat, rolly poly woman with a white complexion who sits at her window half of her time doing nothing. She has a boy of about ten. Her life seemed so simple and still I didn't see how she lived. Evidently she didn't support a husband, but who supported her? The thing worried me, but last night I found how it was. Her husband is a violin player who plays all night long a' some concert hall and sleeps the livelong day. I'd rather work for my living than keep the house quiet for a husband who has to sleep all day, then gets up just at the time you want to go out for a little rollicking and plays the violin somewhere." — New York Press.

Gathering Roses.

I've gathered roses and the like in many glad and golden Junes, but now, as down the world I hike, my weary hands are filled with prunes. I've gathered roses o'er and o'er, and some were white and some were red, but when I took them to the store the grocer wanted eggs instead. I gathered roses long ago, in other days, in other scenes, and people said, "You ought to go and dig the weeds out of your beans." A million roses bloomed and died; a million more will die today. That man is wise who lets them slide and gathers up the bales of hay. —Emporia Gazette.

Forces a Discharge.

"The Japanese servant has many curious traits," said the man who keeps one, "besides his constant habit of eating raw fish, but he is inordinately polite, as a rule. For instance, he never will give you notice that he wishes to leave you. Instead his work will grow steadily worse and worse till you can't stand it any longer, and so you fire him. It's always done purposely to avoid the necessity of telling you outright that he is tired of you and wants to quit."

A Holdup.

De Roads—Mister, I found the dorg your wife is advertisin' a reward uv $5 fer. Mr. Jaw—You did, eh? De Roads—Yes, and if you don't gimme $10 I'll take it back to her. See?—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Made His Mark.

"Well, young Dr. Slicer has made his mark already, hasn't he?"

"Yes; did it on his first case."

"Great Scott! What did he do?"

"Vaccinated him!"

TWISTING A BRONCHO.

How Colts Are Put Through the Grand Merry-go-round.

He was a big black beauty of a colt and just as mean as he was handsome. Bronc had never been thoroughly broken by his former owner, and when I first saw him he was in the hands of the best horse breaker in camp, who was putting the finishing touches to his education.

"They called this pony a' outlaw afore I took a-holt of him," remarked the broncho twister. "Shucks! Nowadays ef a hoss bucks his saddle blankets off'n him the boys say: 'Outlaw! Bad broncho! Guess I'll ride that old hoss over yonder.'

"I've sweated most of the ugliness outen him a'ready," continued the trainer. "He ain't got but one mean habit left, an' today I'm a-goin' to tarn him to fergit it."

The mean habit referred to was this: When Bronc decided to go straight ahead he'd go—over rocks and down the steep banks of a wash, through cactus and the well named cat's claw, and if the chollas pricked him or the curved claws of the brush snatched at his flanks he would throw in some fancy bucking for good measure as he tore along. But turn? Never!

The trainer took his riata from the saddle horn and tied one end to the rope bridle or hackamore, fastening it securely under the jaw. Then he petted the colt, working toward its flanks, until the animal allowed him to reach the tail and fasten a loop of rope in its heavy strands.

The free end of the riata was passed through the loop in a way which would bring the horse's head and tail together when tightened, and by passing the riata once more through both hackamore and loop it was prevented from slipping when released.

"Now fer the grand merry-go-round!" announced the twister, and, standing away from the colt's heels, he pulled the riata taut until the animal was bent nearly double. "Keep turnin' till I say you kin stop," he commanded, and in fact the bewildered creature was revolving like a top and painfully learning the old lesson of his race—that man's will is law for the horse.

We sat in the shade of a mesquite watching him for twenty minutes or so, when the broncho twister decided that the stiff neck was sufficiently limber. When he mounted he discovered his error. The frightened horse danced and bucked with him and finally tried to roll over the rider, who sprang from the saddle just in the nick of time.

But his patience was by no means exhausted.

"Here's a shore way to make 'em limber," he announced, and, picking up a large flat stone, he tapped the horse's neck for a few minutes steadily, but not with sufficient force to hurt him. "He'll feel that perty soon an' find it easier to turn than brace his tender neck agin the reins."

When the pony had been reversed—that is, tied head and tail on the opposite side—and allowed to rotate another half hour, he was dripping with sweat and completely subdued. The broncho twister mounted, and the colt allowed himself to be ridden about the flat until he tangled in his trailing riata and fell, the rider still on top.

"Now we'll turn him loose an' see how he behaves hisself," remarked the trainer, and, unslinging the ropes, he again mounted and rode the now tractable horse in circles and figure eights, wheeling and turning at will.

As the trainer concluded, "I'd a heap sooner twist this critter's neck with a rope than have him break his back an' mine, too, over yonder cliff."

Then He Got His.

A young Lancashire lad joined the army and soon after his arrival at headquarters got into trouble. Accordingly he had to face his commanding officer next morning.

The usual preliminaries were gone through, when, contrary to orderly room etiquette, the recruit commenced to defend himself.

"Silence!" roared the adjutant.

"Thou shut up," said the prisoner. "I'm not speaking to thee. I'm talking to the old chap in the chair."—London Scraps.

Marlin

For shooting the swift flying, heavily feathered ducks and geese the Marlin 12-gauge repeating shotgun has no superior. This gun is exceedingly strong in construction and yet is not heavy. It is bored to throw an excellent pattern with great penetration. The solid top keeps out the weather and the brush and twigs of the blind, and the side ejector prevents the empty shells from being a nuisance to the shooter. It's the best bad weather gun.

The Marlin 12-gauge is suited to all forms of bird and trap shooting, and for durability, strength and ease of action is unexcelled. Made for both black and smokeless powders and for heavy loads. Two separate extractors make sure work.

Officers Elected.

The Clearwater Creamery Association had its annual meeting of stockholders at the creamery on Saturday last and officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows:

President; J. W. Lynch; vice-president, H. P. Lund; secretary, Miss Ida M. Lillo; treasurer, G. T. Heggar;

The board of directors chosen were: Axel Burman, K. N. Syversrud, O. M. Mandt, John Gunderson, Geo. Singer, O. M. Mandt was selected as manager. It was decided to start the creamery just as soon as the plant and supplies are in shape and it is thought that all necessary preparations can be completed by the middle of January, or the first of February at latest. There is enough cream available at any time that all other arrangements are made and it is believed that the output of the creamery will be about double that of last year.

Scarlet fever at Erskine.

Information has been received from Erskine that the public schools of the town have been closed on account of a prevalence of scarletina. A number of cases have been found in the town and immediate community and after a consulation the school authorities decided to take precautionary measures to guard against a spread of the malady. It was accordingly decided to close the schools for a period in order to protect the scholars. It is not believed that the disease will become epidemic.

Kernce Whalen was in from Equality on Thursday to purchase material for a new barn which he will erect on his fine farm.

We want all your butter and eggs and will pay you more than the highest market price for them. Clearwater Mercantile Co.

Miss Julia Hannem came in from her home out east of Erie on Wednesday with John Lundblad and went to Havana, S. D., for a visit with relatives.

Mayfield Murmurs.

Ole Swenson was down to St. Paul with a carload of cattle last week.

Every day now we hear some talk of a telephone line being established between Garnes and Malone.

Arne Sannes came up from McIntosh for a short visit with his sister, Mrs. Gunild Hovstad, and other relatives.

Jens Alrick, from McIntosh, was up here and around Garnes buying cattle. Mr. Alrick intends to ship a carload very soon.

Arthur and Sigvard Grothe have been busy for the past few days fixing up their sleighs and are now all ready for the winter logging.

Sam Lovaas was in Plummer on Wednesday to do some necessary shopping and to meet his daughter, Minnie, who returned from Emerado, N. D. where she has been working durin the summer and fall.

Doings of Deer-Hunters.

The season for hunting deer closed on November 30th but the hunters were allowed until December 5th to get their game, and their stories, out of the woods and home. Most of the hunters managed to get out pretty fair stories but came home minus the deer meat. We have received a few yarns about the hunters and their luck and intended to publish the stories this week. Owing to a pressure of other work we are obliged to leave them out of this issue but we will try to have them appear next week.

A Bad Dream.

It is not likely that any English speaking people understand so keen and punctilious a devotion to the niceties of language as that which characterizes the French grammarians. We may help ourselves to understand it perhaps by reading a story told of M. Lamany.

One night he awoke and sprang out of bed with a wild cry. His wife came running. He was in alarm and despair.

"Why, what is the matter?" she gasped.

"I dreamed," said the professor "Oh, I had a horrible, a heartrending dream!"

"What was it?"

"I dreamed I was talking, and I distinctly heard myself utter a sentence which had a grammatical error in it!"

Couldn't Miss the Chance.

One scarcely looks for humor in an undertaker, but that this, like most rules, has its exceptions was proved recently in Scotland. A tract distributer had affixed this text to a tree on the highroad, "It is appointed to man once to die." This was too good an opportunity to be missed by the local purveyor of coffins, who promptly added the following announcement: "Funerals economically furnished by Blank."

According to History.

A woman who belongs to a community called the Sisters of St. John the Baptist not long ago spent a month in a backwoods district. Shortly after her arrival she went to the local post-office and inquired if any letters had come for Sister Bernardine. The rural postmaster looked bewildered.

"Sister who?" he asked incredulously.

"Sister Bernardine," repeated the lady, "a sister of St. John the Baptist."

"I think not," he answered. Then, after some reflection, he added, "Say, ain't he been dead pretty near a hundred years now?"—Harper's Weekly.

Her Limitations.

"These pianos look too cheap," said the young woman, her brows contracting slightly. "Show me some of the best you've got."

"Yes, ma'am," said the salesman. "May I ask how high you care to go?"

"Me? Oh, I only go to G, but I want one with all the octaves just the same."—Chicago Tribune.

Let Him Try.

"I fear no foe in shining armor," sang the man at a concert.

"Don't you, old chap?" grumbled the bachelor in the front row. "Then you try to open a sardine box with a pocketknife."

SEEING AND LISTENING.

Nearsighted Man Wears Glasses In Talking, but Not In Reading.

"Here's a sort of queer thing," said a nearsighted man. "I am very nearsighted. Strong glasses are indispensable to me for ordinary, general seeing in my goings about, but when I sit down to read I take off my glasses and bring the print up to within the natural focus of the eye. It seems to me that reading with the natural eye I read with a more intimate and a clearer understanding.

"So much for my reading without spectacles, and now here is the thing that is queer to me. If when I am reading thus, with my glasses off, somebody comes along to speak to me, why, then, to get a clear understanding of that question I must have on my spectacles.

"So I say, or I would say if this happened at home where I know the people, 'Wait a minute till I get on my spectacles,' and I would put them on and then say, 'Now go ahead,' and really, with my spectacles on, with my power of seeing at its best, with the sharpest definition of things in general to the eye, I get the clearest apprehension of things said to me.

"So in reading I do best with my glasses off, but in understanding things said to me, in listening, I do best with my glasses on. There is one modification to this—where there is no light, as in a dark room, where I can't see, I can understand equally well with or without glasses."—New York Sun.

Well Turned.

It would be a pleasant thing if all people who are plagued with short memories had the ready tact by which the composer Rossini once turned his own defect into a graceful compliment. He met at a dinner one evening Bishop, the famous English song writer, to whom he had been introduced on a previous occasion and to whom he had taken an instant liking.

"Good evening, Mr."— began Rossini cordially, extending his hand, but the name of his English acquaintance had basely deserted him for the moment.

There was scarcely a perceptible hesitation on his part, however, for instantly he began to whistle softly the opening bars of Bishop's glee, "When the Wind Blows."

The face of the "English Mozart," as Bishop was often called, lighted up with a smile of gratification, and Rossini's failure to recall his name was instantly forgiven in the recognition of this pretty compliment.

Restaurant Affliction.

The waiter in the light lunch cafe looked expectantly at the first of five men who had just entered.

"Bring me a coffee cake and a cup of coffee," ordered the first man.

"I'll take some milk biscuit and a glass of milk," said the second.

"Tea buns and a cup of tea, please," remarked the third.

"A piece of cocoanut pie and a cup of cocoa," said the fourth.

The waiter passed on to the fifth man.

"Don't say it, don't say it!" he pleaded. "I know what you want. You want a slice of chocolate cake and a cup of chocolate."

"No; I do not," protested the fifth man. "I want a plate of ice cream and a glass of ice water."—Judge's Library.

QUEER TITLES.

Bestowed on His Favorites by an Emperor of Haiti.

Among the whimsical titles which appear on the pages of national history few are more apparently frivolous than the Duke of Marmalade, the Count of Lemonade and the Earl of Brandy. They are or were, however, real titles bestowed by a genuine monarch on three of his favorites, and that, too, during the last century.

In 1311 a revolution occurred in Haiti, and Christophe, a negro, declared himself emperor. Through conspiracy and plot, his life often attempted, he retained power till 1320, preserving to the last the pageantry of a royal court and creating a numerous nobility. Among them were the three already mentioned, and the oddity of the titles has suggested to many writers the frivolousness of the African character.

In fact, however, all three names were those of places, the first two being originally plantations, but latterly towns of some importance. This not being generally known, a misapprehension has arisen with regard to the titles themselves, which, however absurd, were scarcely more so than many which were bestowed in France and Germany during the middle ages.—Pearson's Weekly.

Liberty.

The spirit of liberty is indeed a bold and fearless spirit, but it is also a sharp sighted spirit. It is a cautious, sagacious, discriminating, farseeing intelligence. It is jealous of encroachment, jealous of power, jealous of man. It demands checks, it seeks for guards, it insists on securities, it entrenches itself behind strong defenses and fortifies itself with all possible care against the assaults of ambition and passion. It does not trust the amiable weaknesses of human nature, and therefore it will not permit power to overstep its prescribed limits, though benevolence, good intent and patriotic purpose come along with it. Neither does it satisfy itself with flashy and temporary resistance to illegal authority. Far otherwise. It seeks for duration and permanence. It looks before and after, and, building on the experience of ages which are past, it labors diligently for the benefit of ages to come.—Daniel Webster.

The Blue Sky.

The blue sky which reveals itself as the hemispherical vault of the firmament in the absence of clouds is the far depths of the air sending back to the observer some part of the solar illumination which they receive. The light thus returned to the eye is "blue" simply because the particles of the air are of such exceedingly diminutive size that they can effectively deal with only the smallest of the luminous vibrations—that is, with the "blue" undulations. There are a few faint interminglings of the other colored rays in the blue of the sky, but they are in such trifling quantity that the blue swallows them up.

Hairbreadth.

Stella—I suppose you have had many hairbreadth escapes? Knicker—Yes; a woman's coiffure was all that kept me from seeing a play once.—Harper's Bazar.

The amity that wisdom knits not, folly may easily untie.—Shakespeare.

HEAR MESSAGE OF PRESIDENT

DOCUMENT FROM CHIEF EXECUTIVE READ IN CONGRESS.

URGES CHANGES IN LAWS

Present Currency System Declared Imperfect—Control of Corporations the Province of the National Government—Conduct of Labor Leaders Criticised—For Postal Savings Banks.

Washington.—In his message to congress, read in both houses Tuesday, President Roosevelt makes important suggestions as to what he considers necessary legislation.

The president congratulates the nation on its present excellent financial standing, but calls attention to the need of remedying defects in the currency system. He says:

The financial standing of the nation at the present time is excellent, and the financial management of the nation's interests by the government during the last seven years has shown the most satisfactory results. But our currency system is imperfect, and it is earnestly to be hoped that the currency commission will be able to propose a thoroughly good system which will do away with the existing defects.

During the period from July 1, 1901, to September 30, 1908, there was an increase in the amount of money in circulation of $902,991,399. The increase in the per capita during this period was $7.06. Within this time there were several occasions when it was necessary for the treasury department to come to the relief of the money market by purchases or redemptions of United States bonds; by increasing deposits in national banks; by stimulating additional issues of national bank notes, and by facilitating importations from abroad of gold. Our imperfect currency system has made these proceedings necessary, and they were effective until the monetary disturbance in the fall of 1907 immensely increased the difficulty of ordinary methods of relief. By the middle of November the available working balance in the treasury had been reduced to approximately $5,000,000. Clearing house associations throughout the country had been obliged to resort to the expedient of issuing clearing house certificates, to be used as money. In this emergency it was determined to invite subscriptions for $50,000,000 Panama canal bonds, and $100,000,000 three per cent. certificates of indebtedness authorized by the act of June 13, 1898. It was proposed to redeposit in the national banks the proceeds of these issues, and to permit their use as a basis for additional circulating notes of national banks. The moral effect of this procedure was so great that it was necessary to issue only $24,631,980 of the Panama bonds and $15,436,500 of the certificates of indebtedness.

During the period from July 1, 1901, to September 30, 1908, the balance between the net ordinary receipts and the net ordinary expenses of the government showed a surplus in the four years 1902, 1903, 1906, and 1907, and a deficit in the years 1904, 1905, 1908 and a fractional part of the fiscal year 1909. The net result was a surplus of $99,283,413.54. The financial operations of the government during this period, based upon these differences between receipts and expenditures, resulted in a net reduction of the interest-bearing debt of the United States from $987,141,040 to $897,253,990, notwithstanding that there had been two sales of Panama canal bonds amounting in the aggregate to $54,631,980, and an issue of three per cent. certificates of indebtedness under the act of June 13, 1898, amounting to $15,436,500. Refunding operations of the treasury department under the act of March 14, 1900, resulted in the conversion into two per cent. consols of 1930 of $200,309,400 bonds bearing higher rates of interest. A decrease of $8,687,956 in the annual interest charge resulted from these operations.

In short, during the seven years and three months there has been a net surplus of nearly one hundred millions of receipts over expenditures, a reduction of the interest-bearing debt by ninety millions, in spite of the extraordinary expense of the Panama canal, and a saving of nearly nine millions on the annual interest charge.

The message reiterates the well-known views of the president that the control of great corporations, especially the railroads of the country, should be vested in the national government. He says:

I believe that it is worse than folly to attempt to prohibit all combinations as is done by the Sherman anti-trust law, because such a law can be enforced only imperfectly and unequally, and its enforcement works almost as much hardship as good. I strongly advocate that instead of an unwise effort to prohibit all combinations, there shall be substituted a law which shall expressly permit combinations which are in the interest of the public, but shall at the same time give to some agency in the national government full power of control and supervision over them.

The railways of the country should be put completely under the interstate commerce commission and removed from the domain of the anti-trust law. The power of the commission should be made thoroughgoing, so that it could exercise complete supervision and control over the issue of securities as well as over the raising and lowering of rates. As regards rates, at least, this power should be summary. . . . Rates must be made as low as is compatible with giving proper returns to all the employes of the railroad, from the highest to the lowest, and proper returns to the shareholders, but they must not, for instance, be reduced in such fashion as to necessitate a cut in the wages of the employes or the abolition of the proper and legitimate profits of honest shareholders.

Interests of the Wageworker.

Turning to conditions affecting the wageworker and the man of small means, the president says:

Postal Savings banks will make it easy for the poorest to keep their savings in absolute safety. The regulation of the national highways must be such that they shall serve all people with equal justice. Corporate finances must be supervised so as to make it far safer than at present for the man of small means to invest his money in stocks. There must be prohibition of child labor, diminution of women labor, shortening of hours of all mechanical labor; stock watering should be prohibited, and stock gambling so far as is possible discouraged. There should be a progressive inheritance tax on large fortunes. Industrial education should be encouraged. As far as possible we should lighten the burden of taxation on the small man. There should no longer be any paltering with the question of taking care of the wageworkers who, under our present industrial system, become killed, crippled, or worn out as part of the regular incidents of a given business. As far as concerns those who have been worn out, I call your attention to the fact that definite steps toward providing old-age pensions have been taken in many of our private industries. These may be indefinitely extended through voluntary association and contributory schemes, or through the agency of savings banks, as under the Massachusetts plan.

Urgent Need of Reform.

Our present system, or rather no system, works dreadful wrong, and is of benefit to only one class of people—the lawyers. When a workman is injured what he needs is not an expensive and doubtful lawsuit, but the certainty of relief through immediate administrative action. No academic theory about "freedom of contract" or "constitutional liberty to contract" should be permitted to interfere with this and similar movements.

I renew my recommendation that the principle of the eight-hour day should as rapidly and as far as practicable be extended to the entire work being carried on by the government; the present law should be amended to embrace contracts on those public works which the present wording of the act seems to exclude.

Judges Too Poorly Paid.

Coupled with a eulogy of the judiciary of the nation the president urges that, beginning with the supreme court, the judges should have their salaries doubled.

As was to be expected, the attitude assumed by certain labor leaders during the recent election comes in for bitter criticism. The president asserts that demands made on congress for legislation were unjust and impractical and could but work harm to the cause of labor. While declaring that our judicial system is sound and effective at core, the president says:

There are certain decisions by various courts which have been exceedingly detrimental to the rights of wage-workers. This is true of all decisions that decide that men are, by the constitution, "guaranteed their liberty" to contract to enter a dangerous occupation, or to work an undesirable or improper number of hours, or to work in unhealthy surroundings; and therefore cannot recover damages when maimed in that occupation, and cannot be forbidden to work what the legislature decides is an excessive number of hours, or to carry on the work under conditions which the legislature decides to be unhealthy.

There is also, I think, ground for the belief that substantial injustice is often suffered by employes in consequence of the custom of courts issuing temporary injunctions without notice to them, and punishing them for contempt of court in instances where, as a matter of fact, they have no knowledge of any proceedings. Organized labor is chafing under the unjust restraint which comes from repeated resort to this plan of procedure.

Injunction Must Remain.

The power of injunction is a great equitable remedy, which should on no account be destroyed. But safeguards should be erected against its abuse. In substance, provision should be made that no injunction or temporary restraining order issue otherwise than on notice, except where irreparable injury would otherwise result; and in such case a hearing on the merits of the order should be had within a short fixed period, and, if not then continued after hearing, it should forthwith lapse. Decisions should be rendered immediately, and the chance of delay minimized in every way. Moreover, I believe that the procedure should be sharply defined, and the judge required minutely to state the particulars both of his action and of his reasons therefor, so that the congress can if it desires examine and investigate the same.

Harm Worked by Law.

Discussing measures necessary for the proper control of giant corporations operating in defiance of law, the president says:

Real damage has been done by the manifold and conflicting interpretations of the interstate commerce law. Control over the great corporations doing interstate business can be effective only if it is vested with full power in an administrative department, a branch of the federal executive, carrying out a federal law; it can never be effective if a divided responsibility is left in both the states and the nation; it can never be effective if left in the hands of the courts to be decided by lawsuits.

The courts hold a place of peculiar and deserved sanctity under our form of government. Respect for the law is essential to the permanence of our institutions; and respect for the law is largely conditioned upon respect for the courts. It is an offense against the republic to say anything which can weaken this respect, save for the gravest reason and in the most carefully guarded manner. In no other nation in the world do the courts wield such vast and far-reaching power as in the United States. All that is necessary is that the courts as a whole should exercise this power with the far-sighted wisdom already shown by those judges who scan the future while they act in the present.

Forest Preservation.

The manifest necessity for forest preservation is pointed out as a duty the present generation owes to its descendants, and the president cites the case of China, where reckless de-forestation has resulted in creating deserts, as an object lesson.

Inland Waterways.

Immediate action by the present session of congress for the improvement of our inland waterways the president declares to be imperative. He recommends the creation of a permanent commission authorized to coordinate the work of all the government departments relating to waterways, and to frame and supervise the execution of a comprehensive plan.

Postal Savings Banks.

Urging the immediate institution of postal savings banks, the message says:

I again renew my recommendation for postal savings banks, for depositing savings with the security of the government behind them. The object is to encourage thrift and economy in the wage-earner and person of moderate means. It is believed that in the aggregate vast sums of money would be brought into circulation through the instrumentality of the postal savings banks.

Parcel Post.

The much-discussed advisability of the establishment of a parcel post service is thus dealt with:

In my last annual message I commended the postmaster-general's recommendation for an extension of the parcel post on the rural routes. The establishment of a local parcel post on rural routes would be to the mutual benefit of the farmer and the country storekeeper, and it is desirable that the routes, serving more than 15,000,000 people, should be utilized to the fullest practicable extent.

Education.

Dealing with the important subject of education, the president says:

With the limited means hitherto provided, the bureau of education has rendered efficient service, but the congress has neglected to adequately supply the bureau with means to meet the educational growth of the country. I earnestly recommend that this unfortunate state of affairs as regards the national educational office be remedied by adequate appropriations. This recommendation is urged by the representatives of our common schools and great state universities and the leading educators, who all unite in requesting favorable consideration and action by the congress upon this subject.

The president points out the necessity of better organization of the various bureaus responsible for the public health, and urges the placing of all soldiers' homes under the jurisdiction of the war department.

Statehood.

On the question of statehood the president says:

I advocate the immediate admission of New Mexico and Arizona as states. This should be done at the present session of the congress. The people of the two territories have made it evident by their votes that they will not come in as one state. The only alternative is to admit them as two, and I trust that this will be done without delay.

Interstate Fisheries.

An international agreement concerning interstate fisheries is at present being attempted, and in this connection the message continues:

I call the attention of the congress to the importance of the problem of the fisheries in the interstate waters. On the Great Lakes we are now, under the very wise treaty of April 11 of this year, endeavoring to come to an international agreement for the preservation and satisfactory use of the fisheries of these waters which can not otherwise be achieved. Lake Erie, for example, has the richest fresh water fisheries in the world; but it is now controlled by the statutes of two nations, four states, and one province, and this province by two different ordinances in different counties. All these political divisions work at cross purposes, and in no case can they achieve protection to the fisheries, on the one hand, and justice to the localities and individuals on the other.

Country's Foreign Policy.

This nation's foreign policy is based on the theory that right must be done between nations precisely as between individuals, and in our actions for the last ten years we have in this matter proven our faith by our deeds. We have behaved, and are behaving, towards other nations, as in private life an honorable man would behave towards his fellows.

I take this opportunity publicly to state my appreciation of the way in which in Japan, in Australia, in New Zealand, and in all the states of South America, the battle fleet has been received on its practice voyage around the world. The American government can not too strongly express its appreciation of the abounding and generous hospitality shown our ships in every port they visited.

Our Southern Neighbors.

The commercial and material progress of the 20 Latin-American republics is worthy of the careful attention of the congress. The International Bureau of the American Republics is doing a useful work in making these nations and their resources better known to us, and in acquainting them not only with us as a people and with our purposes towards them, but with what we have to exchange for their goods.

Panama Canal Being Rushed.

The work on the Panama canal is being done with a speed, efficiency and entire devotion to duty, which make it a model for all work of the kind. The men on the Isthmus, from Col. Goethals and his fellow commissioners through the entire list of employes who are faithfully doing their duty, have won their right to the ungrudging respect and gratitude of the American people.

For Ocean Mail Lines.

I again recommend the extension of the ocean mail act of 1891 so that satisfactory American ocean mail lines to South America, Asia, the Philippines, and Australasia may be established.

Should Develop Hawaii.

I call particular attention to the Territory of Hawaii. The importance of those islands is apparent, and the need of improving their condition and developing their resources is urgent.

Progress in the Philippines.

Real progress toward self-government is being made in the Philippine islands. I trust that within a generation the time will arrive when the Filipinos can decide for themselves whether it is well for them to become independent, or to continue under the protection of a strong and disinterested power, able to guarantee to the islands order at home and protection from foreign invasion.

Good Work Done in Cuba.

In Cuba our occupancy will cease in about two months' time; the Cubans have in orderly manner elected their own governmental authorities, and the island will be turned over to them. Our occupation on this occasion has lasted a little over two years, and Cuba has thriven and prospered under it. Our earnest hope and one desire is that the people of the island shall now govern themselves with justice, so that peace and order may be secure.

The National Guard.

Now that the organized militia, the National Guard, has been incorporated with the army as a part of the national forces, it behooves the government to do every reasonable thing in its power to perfect its efficiency. It should be assisted in its instruction and otherwise aided more liberally than heretofore. The continuous services of many well-trained regular officers will be essential in this connection. A bill is now pending before the congress creating a number of extra officers in the army, which if passed, as it ought to be, will enable more officers to be trained as instructors of National Guard and assigned to that duty. In case of war it will be of the utmost importance to have a large number of trained officers to use for turning raw levies into good troops.

For More War Vessels.

The navy is the last subject dealt with. In that connection the president says:

I approve the recommendations of the general board for the increase of the navy, calling especial attention to the need of additional destroyers and colliers, and above all, of the four battleships. It is desirable to complete as soon as possible a squadron of eight battleships of the best existing type.

I most earnestly recommend that the general board be by law turned into a general staff. There is literally no excuse whatever for continuing the present bureau organization of the navy. The navy should be treated as a purely military organization, and everything should be subordinated to the one object of securing military efficiency. A system of promotion by merit, either by selection or by exclusion, or by both processes, should be introduced.

Dyspepsia Is Often Caused by Catarrh of the Stomach—Peruna Relieves Catarrh of the Stomach and Is Therefore a Remedy for Dyspepsia.

Hon. M. C. Butler, U. S. Senator from South Carolina for two terms, in a letter from Washington, D. C., writes to the Peruna Medicine Co., as follows:

"I can recommend Peruna for dyspepsia and stomach trouble. I have been using your medicine for a short period and I feel very much relieved. It is indeed a wonderful medicine, besides a good tonic."

CATARRH of the stomach is the correct name for most cases of dyspepsia. Only an internal catarrh remedy, such as Peruna, is available.

Peruna Tablets can now be procured.

PROVED BY TIME.

No Fear of Any Further Trouble.

David Price, Corydon, Ia., says: "I was in the last stage of kidney trouble—lame, weak, run down to a mere skeleton. My back was so bad I could hardly walk and the kidney secretions much disordered. A week after I began using Doan's Kidney Pills I could walk without a cane, and as I continued my health gradually returned. I was so grateful I made a public statement of my case, and now seven years have passed, I am still perfectly well."

WHAT WOULD HE HAVE SAID?

"Get up, Jack. You mustn't cry like a baby! You're quite a man now. You know if I fell down I shouldn't cry, I should merely say—"

"Yes, I know, pa; but then—I go to Sunday school—and you don't."

TORTURED SIX MONTHS

By Terrible Itching Eczema—Baby's Suffering Was Terrible—Soon Entirely Cured by Cuticura.

"Eczema appeared on my son's face. We went to a doctor who treated him for three months. Then he was so bad that his face and head were nothing but one sore and his ears looked as if they were going to fall off, so we tried another doctor for four months, the baby never getting any better. His hand and legs had big sores on them and the poor little fellow suffered so terribly that he could not sleep. After he had suffered six months we tried a set of the Cuticura Remedies and the first treatment let him sleep and rest well; in one week the sores were gone and in two months he had a clear face. Now he is two years and has never had eczema again. Mrs. Louis Leck, R. F. D. 3, San Antonio, Tex., Apr. 15, 1907."

RECIPE FOR REAL TROUBLE.

Cheerfully Contributed to an Already Unhappy World.

Trouble making is an older industry than the manufacture of steel. Cain, the trouble maker, got into action before Tubal Cain, the iron worker; and Eve got Adam into hot water long before the Boiler Makers' union began business.

There are three kinds of trouble—imaginary, borrowed and real.

Imaginary trouble consists of railroad accidents, earthquakes, fires, suicides, the poorhouse, death, and the grave, carefully mixed and taken after a late dinner, or a drop in the stock market.

Borrowed trouble is the kind we get from our relatives. Its principal ingredients are visits, borrowed money, birthday presents, advice and expectations. But the real article is produced as follows: Put the sandals of endurance on your feet, take your life in your hands and follow by turn the How-to-Be-Happy Philosopher, the Preacher of Physical Culture and the Apostle of Diet.—Puck.

Grown-Up Children.

It is not only the frivolous whom the spirit of childishness is just now leading astray. Silliness is the fashion even among the wise. Women especially affect a kind of childish shrewdness in talking of serious subjects. Like children who have the habit of romancing, they lose the sense of reality, and because they never talk exactly as they think they begin to think exactly as they talk.—London Spectator.

CAUSE AND EFFECT

Good Digestion Follows Right Food.

Indigestion and the attendant discomforts of mind and body are certain to follow continued use of improper food.

Those who are still young and robust are likely to overlook the fact that, as dropping water will wear a stone away at last, so will the use of heavy, greasy, rich food, finally cause loss of appetite and indigestion.

Fortunately many are thoughtful enough to study themselves and note the principle of Cause and Effect in their daily food. A N. Y. young woman writes her experience thus:

"Sometime ago I had a lot of trouble from indigestion, caused by too rich food. I got so I was unable to digest scarcely anything, and medicines seemed useless.

"A friend advised me to try Grape-Nuts food, praising it highly, and as a last resort I tried it. I am thankful to say that Grape-Nuts not only relieved me of my trouble, but built me up and strengthened my digestive organs so that I can now eat anything I desire. But I stick to Grape-Nuts."

"There's a Reason."

NORTHERN PACIFIC TRAIN IS DITCHED

ONE MAN KILLED AND MANY INJURED IN WRECK OF NORTH COAST LIMITED.

Disaster Occurs 20 Miles from Bismarck, N. D. Was Crowded to Its Full Capacity. The Coaches Slowly Turned Over.

Bismarck, N. D., Dec. 10.—Trying to make up lost time, the North Coast Limited on the Northern Pacific which left St. Paul at 10:15 yesterday morning carrying a full train of of day coaches, sleepers and observation car ran down a ten-foot embankment within a half a mile of McKenzie, a small station about 20 miles east of here at about 1 o'clock this morning.

Owing to the distance from town, only meager reports of the disaster have been received up to the present, but from them it is learned that the train rolled over on its side, the engine, baggage and mail cars remain on the track.

One man is reported to have bled to death and twenty-five are said to have been seriously injured. The slow turning over of the coaches as they fell was the only thing that averted what might have been the most tragic disaster this section has ever seen, as the train was crowded to its full capacity.

Doctors from this city have been rushed to the aid of the injured, and a wrecking train and outfit have also left for the scene of the disaster.

The train is lying on edge parallel to the tracks and is not much injured beyond the loss of the trucks.

FIRE CAUSES HEAVY LOSS.

Flames Destroy Three Buildings at Grand Harbor, N. D.

Grand Harbor, N. D., Dec. 5.—Fire here destroyed three business buildings and caused a loss of about $10,000. It started in the Stoesser building, owned and occupied as a hotel by William Britton. Loss on this building is $3,000 and insurance $1,500; loss on furnishings was $1,500, with no insurance.

A one-story building, occupied by C. E. Mackey, was destroyed causing a loss of $1,500. Mackey carried a total insurance of $600. A small store was also destroyed, causing a total loss of $2,000. It is partially covered by insurance.

OPEN TRAFFIC BY JAN. 1.

Warroad Extension Work Is Being Rapidly Pushed.

Thief River Falls, Minn., Dec. 5.—The Thief River Falls extension of the Great Northern railway to the Canadian boundary at Warroad is being pushed fast toward completion.

The contractors have every mile of the right of way covered with men and machinery and the cold weather only will tend to hasten the work. It is fully expected that the end of this month will see the opening of the road for all kinds of traffic.

IOWAN IN DOUBLE ACCIDENT.

Run Over by Auto After Being Thrown From Runaway Carriage.

Nashua, Iowa, Dec. 5.—Dan Shields is quite seriously injured as the result of a double accident. He was in a runaway, and was thrown from a carriage and lay unconscious along the roadway. An automobile passed, and as it was dark struck the man. The occupants stopped the machine and went back and picked him up and took him to a surgeon, where he was cared for. The extent of his injuries cannot yet be told.

Official Vote Compiled.

Pierre, S. D., Dec. 5.—The official figures on the late election which have been completed show the Taft vote to be 67 936; Bryan, 40,266. The congressional vote was (Rep.), Martin, 67,582; Burke, 67,400; (Dem.), Dowdell, 38,758; Olsen, 38,622; special election, Martin 65,762; Soule 39,865. For governor, Vessey (Rep.), 62,989; Lee (Dem.), 48,837.

Wreckage Identified.

Duluth, Dec. 10.—A message from Grand Marais, Mich., states that in addition to the hatch-covers that have been washed ashore there, a part of the cabin of the steamer Clemson came ashore yesterday afternoon and has been positively identified.

Killed by Train.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

MATTERS OF INTEREST IN THE GOPHER STATE.

Gov. Johnson Announces Some Appointments He Will Make—Visit Prevented By Death.

Campaign Funds.

Minneapolis.—L. S. Swenson, treasurer of the republican state central committee, has filed with the auditor of Hennepin county a financial statement showing that the campaign receipts and expenditures of the committee were $22,314.49, and that the committee is in debt to the extent of $1,504.66. The statement is brief, and lawyers say that Mr. Swenson and the treasurers of the different campaign committees in Hennepin county who have filed statements with the county auditor have failed to obey the provisions of the state law and are liable to prosecution for misdemeanor.

The state law provides, in section 258 of the code, that the treasurer of a political committee shall prepare and file with the auditor of the county in which he resides "a true and detailed statement, subscribed and verified by him, setting forth each and every sum of money by him received or disbursed for such purposes, the date of each receipt and disbursement, the name of the person from whom received or to whom paid, and the purposes of each. Such statement shall also contain a detailed list of the unpaid debts, if any, of such committee, with the nature and amount of each, and to whom owing; and, if there are no such debts, the statement shall so allege."

The code makes failure to file the account required by law a misdemeanor.

Plums.

St. Paul.—Gov. Johnson before his departure for Washington admitted that the following officeholders were practically sure of reappointment:

Frank A. Day, private secretary.
Harvey Grimmer, executive clerk.
John E. King, state librarian.
Thomas Downs, capitol building custodian.
Fred B. Wood, adjutant general.
George S. Wood, assistant adjutant general.
W. H. Hatcher, military storekeeper.
J. A. Hartigan, insurance commissioner.
J. W. Olsen, superintendent of instruction.
C. G. Schulz, assistant superintendent.
Anton Schaefer, public examiner.

In the labor department, W. E. McEwan, now oil inspector, will be placed at the head while the office vacated by him will be filled by E. J. Lynch. These two appointments have already been announced.

Ore Shipments.

Duluth.—The News-Tribune's compilation of iron ore shipments for 1908 from the Lake Superior region gives the tonnage at 25,420,752. This is complete with the exception of two or three cargoes which will leave Escanaba, Mich., tomorrow or Monday.

The Mesaba range in northern Minnesota produced the bulk of the ore, its output being 17,231,804 tons. Shipments from ports were as follows:

Duluth, 8,808,000; Two Harbors, 5,702,237; Superior, Wis., 3,563,111; Escanaba, Mich., 3,346,149; Ashland, Wis., 2,513,670; Marquette, Mich., 1,487,485.

Last season the iron ore production of the Lake Superior region was 42,245,070 tons. Indications are that last year's record-breaking tonnage will be equalled or beaten by the output of next season.

Fifty Families Needy.

Duluth.—Mayor W. A. Haven of this city, chairman of the relief committee appointed by Gov. Johnson to succor the unfortunates in this section who suffered by the forest fires this year, has a list of fifty North Shore families deserving of assistance. At first it was estimated that not more than fifteen families would need assistance, but investigation has increased the original estimate. Many of the settlers need lumber to rebuild their houses, and it is planned to hurry the necessary building material north as soon as possible. N. J. Miller is making a tour of the North Shore investigating meritorious cases, and upon his return, definite advices as to actual needs of the fire sufferers will be available.

Miscellaneous Notes.

Hamline.—Dean E. W. Randall of the state college of agriculture, will for a while combine his college duties with those of his new position as president of the Minnesota Mutual Life Insurance company.

Minneapolis.—The attraction at the Bijou Opera House, Minneapolis, for the week of December 13th., will be "The Governor and the Boss." Wm. H. Turner, well remembered for his excellent work in "David Harum," will enact the title role of the "Boss."

Red Wing.—A. C. Stedman, while placing corn in the mow, fell several feet from a ladder which gave way under his weight and received a fractured skull.

St. Paul.—When the legislature starts work of reapportionment plan worked out in 1907 probably will be used, increasing house membership by ten.

Minneapolis.—Horace Des Chene, fifty-four years old, a carpenter residing at 511 James avenue north, was killed by a street car near Lake Harriet.

OF TWO EVILS, ETC.

Youngster Evidently Had His Own Idea as to the Choice.

My neighbor, writes a correspondent, has four young sons, whom he and his wife duly lead to church every Sunday. Just as the sermon was about to begin last Sunday one of the boys was observed to look very uncomfortable, and, having explained the nature of his sufferings, was sent home. His younger brother, in an urgent whisper, demanded of his mother: "Where's Tom gone?"

"He's gone home."

"What for?"

"The mother whispered, low: "He's got toothache."

And the lad, as he sat up to listen to the preacher, muttered, in a stage whisper: "Lucky dog!"

LAME BACK PRESCRIPTION

The increased use of "Toris" for lame back and rheumatism is causing considerable discussion among the medical fraternity. It is an almost infallible cure when mixed with certain other ingredients and taken properly. The following formula is effective: "To one-half pint of good whiskey add one ounce of Toris Compound and one ounce Syrup Sarsaparilla Compound. Take in tablespoonful doses before each meal and before retiring."

Toris compound is a product of the laboratories of the Globe Pharmaceutical Co., Chicago, but it as well as the other ingredients can be had from any good druggist.

ENGLISH HUMOR.

She—Pooh! What is a kiss It is nothing.

He—Well you once said you could refuse me nothing, you know.—Chips.

Ready with the Answer.

Miss Baxter, feeling the effects of a torrid afternoon in June, was attempting to arouse the interest of her languid class by giving, as she supposed, an interesting talk on the obelisk. After speaking for half an hour she found that her efforts were wasted. Feeling utterly provoked, she cried: "Every word that I have said you have let in at one ear and out of the other. You"—pointing to a girl whom she noticed had been particularly inattentive throughout the entire lesson—"tell me, what is an obelisk?"

The pupil, grasping the teacher's last words, rose and promptly answered:

"An obelisk is something that goes in one ear and out the other."—Success Magazine.

Why He Remembered.

By some shuffling of the social cards the clergyman and the dog fancier were at the same afternoon tea. The wandering talk unexpectedly resolved itself into the question. Who were the 12 sons of Jacob? Even the cleric with the reversed collar had forgotten, but the doggy man reeled off the names without error, from Reuben down to Benjamin.

The clergyman looked surprised.

"Oh, I'm not great shakes on Scripture," said the man with the fox terriers, "but those are the names which some chap gave to a dozen puppies I'm willing to sell."

Not Anxious at All.

"One word of our language that is almost always misused," said the particular man, "is 'anxious.' You will hear people exclaim how anxious they are to see a certain play, or anxious to get a new hat, or anxious to take a trip to Europe, when they are not anxious at all, but eager or desirous. If anxious were used only in the right place we wouldn't hear it half so often."

A Death Each Second.

The number of deaths in the world annually is 33,333,333, or 91,954 per day, 3,730 per hour, 60 per minute, or one per second. It is estimated that the population of the earth at the present time is being increased at the rate of about 16,500,000 annually.

A DESERVED PROMOTION.

F. R. Pechin, for the past several years Supt. of the Wisconsin Division of the C. & N. W. R'y, has been tendered and has accepted the position of General Superintendent of the C., St. P., M. & O. R'y, with headquarters at St. Paul. Mr. Pechin was born in Pennsylvania and began his railway career with the North-Western as Brakeman at Chicago in 1880. By sheer force of ability, coupled with hard work, he rose rapidly, occupying by successive stages the positions of Conductor, Inspector of Passenger Service, Trainmaster, Ass't Division Sup't, Division Sup't, and now General Sup't of the Omaha Road. Mr. Pechin is a splendid type of the self-made man—strong, quiet, yet genial—still in the prime of life, he will go far, and deservedly so. He has a peculiar faculty for handling men, and always manages to get the best out of them. He has made hosts of friends who will watch his future career with the liveliest interest.

THE QUARREL.

Him—Oh, don't be so bromidic! That's what everybody asks.

A Multiplicity of Fathers.

Ardyce had been learning to sing "America" at school and was trying to teach it to brother Wayne. One morning his father heard him shouting: "Land where my papa died, land where my papa died."

Ardyce interrupted: "Oh, no, Wayne, not that way. It is 'Land where our fathers died.'"

Wayne's expression could not be described as he tipped his head sidewise, and in a very surprised tone gravely asked: "Two of 'em?"—Delineator.

OFFICIAL PAPER of RED LAKE COUNTY

Subscription price, $1.50 per year
If paid in advance, $1.00.

Entered at the Post-office in Plummer, Minn. as Second Class Mail Matter.

It seems that Senator A. D. Stephens, of Crookston, will probably be made chairman of the senate committee on appropriations when the state legislature convenes in January. If he lands the job it is likely that the interest of northern Minnesota will be better taken care of than in the past.

Uncle Sam and Japan are at present enjoying the "entente cordial" intensified. That means about the same as sitting out the dances, or holding hands under the corner of the table cloth. Its a nice game, too, but dangerous. If you must play, Uncle, keep your other hand on your tomahawk and dont forget to cut the cards.

President Roosevelt sent in a tropical message to Congress when it met last Monday. According to the press dispatches both the senate and the lower house got mad when they read it and some of the dignified senators are in favor of giving the president a vigorous slam. When his present term is out the president is going to Africa to learn the fine tricks in killing off the large beasts and when he returns he will probably take a seat in the senate and carry on the same game.

EXPLOSIVES.

Dangerous Substances That Are In Almost Constant Use.

Among the many things in almost constant use are some that are more or less dangerous from their explosive properties, properties often entirely unknown to their users.

For examples, chloride of potash lozenges if accidentally brought in contact with an unlighted phosphorous match are dangerous. Bicarbonate of potash if mixed with subnitrate of bismuth, the latter a remedy for indigestion, will explode.

Iodide of nitrogen is highly explosive and is often combined with other drugs. Its use by those ignorant of its danger is a menace.

Sal volatile and chloral hydrate are, under certain conditions, as dangerous as dynamite.

Tincture of iron and dilute aqua regia when mixed, as they often are in medicine, throw off a highly explosive gas, which has frequently shattered the bottle in which the mixture was kept.

One often finds bottles of medicine in which the cork has not been tightly pushed minus the latter or has had a cork pop out of a bottle while held in one's hands without any attempt to remove it on the part of the holder. This always shows that gas is forcing the cork out.

Danger in combs.

Every now and then one reads of celluloid articles, from fancy hair coiffure combs down, catching fire and serious burns or accidents resulting.

It would seem that every one should by this time know that celluloid contains in its composition gun cotton and also camphor, both highly inflammable. No woman wearing celluloid combs or hair ornaments should place her head near an uncovered gas jet or other unprotected light, as celluloid catches fire so quickly and burns so rapidly that it would hardly be possible to avoid serious burns.—St. Louis Republic.

He Knew.

"I suppose you know why you are here?" asked the judge severely.

"Yes, sir," answered the prisoner. "I wuz drug here."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Marlin

For shooting the swift flying, heavily feathered ducks and geese the Marlin 12-gauge repeating shotgun has no superior. This gun is exceedingly strong in construction and yet is not heavy. It is bored to throw an excellent pattern with great penetration. The solid top keeps out the weather and the brush and twigs of the blind, and the side ejector prevents the empty shells from being a nuisance to the shooter. It's the best bad weather gun.

The Marlin 12-gauge is suited to all forms of bird and trap shooting, and for durability, strength and ease of action is unexcelled. Made for both black and smokeless powders and for heavy loads. Two separate extractors make sure work.

With The Deer Hunters.

Quite a number of yarns have been told by the hunters who went after big game during the season recently closed, and some of these stories are a little out of the ordinary. Those we have heard that are of local interest we take pleasure in giving briefly.

Ralph Green, of Equality, entertained his brother, Dwight Green and a friend named Jensen, who came up from Hening. They hunted and traveled a lot without any success and finally Jensen got tired and returned to the camp to rest up a few days while the Green hunters tracked each other and the game around for a few days. While waiting at the camp and practising at taking sights at things with his rifle Jensen was surprised to see a fine deer trot up within a few rods of where he stood. He took a long careful aim and fired and was much more surprised to see the deer drop in its tracks. Some time later the others returned and Jensen pointed with pride to his game which still lay where it had fallen. They went to the deer and let its life blood flow while the triumphant shooter explained what a fine shot he had made Then one of the Greens asked him what he had done with his rifle. "Rifle," said Jensen, "what rifle?" Gently they broke the news to him that the deer seemed to have been killed by a shot from a rifle, and after a long hunt the missing fire-arm was found laying some distance from the place where Jensen claimed he stood when he fired the fatal shot. An inquest was held over the remains of the deer and a verdict of accidental death returned, the jury finding that the animal had been killed by some person unknown. And Ralph Green says that Jenson did not have any evidence or protest to make to the verdict.

From Deer Park comes a complaint concerning a bunch of hunters from Mayfield who went over there in search of venison. The Mayfield men it is alleged, were assisted in their hunt by a few residents of Deer Park and a whole week was spent and a bag of five deer secured. The Deer Park fellows claim that they have not tasted venison this year because all five of the deer killed succeeded in escaping into Mayfield with the hunters from that township. Now they threaten that if the Mayfield fellows want to get any game over there next season they will first have to sign a binding contract to divide up with their helpers.

Perhaps the oddest story of all was the experience of Henry Glere, who lives about four miles east of town. Before the season opened he fortified himself with the necessary license and after the season had been open for a couple of days he took a tramp out in the woods in the western part of Garnes. He had not been going more than a few minutes when three deer started up. Bang, Bang, went Henry's rifle and the proposition was to find a way to get home two fine deer he had killed with his first two shots. Yes, this story is somewhat unusual, but Henry got the deer just the same.

The editor went out hunting one day too, but his experience during the hunt was not very much different from that of hundreds of others. On his return he was discussing the hunt with the office devil. The editor thought that the best place to shoot a deer to kill it was down in the vicinity of Lost river, while the devil scientifically explained that the best place to shoot a deer was just behind the fore leg or a little before the hind leg, or far enough before the fore leg for the deer to get it in the neck. It is true that we fired several shots on the day in question and it is equally true that we failed to kill what we shot at, but it just naturally riles us to have any devil differ from us regarding the proper way and place to shoot a deer. This particular devil does not know anything about that kind of deer hunting, anyway.

On one of the first days of the season a hunter is alleged to have shot a fine buck but failed to kill him. This happened a few miles south of Plummer and during the remainder of the season a dozen or more different hunters struck the bloody trail left by the wounded deer, and every one followed it until they got their feet wet, when they had to go home and change their socks. There has been some great changes rround here lately. Strange- very strange- about that deer- but we heard the story all through the season and we believe it is the longest deer tale of the year.

Dr. N. M. Watson, the well-known physician of Red Lake Falls, is at present confined to his bed as the result of internal injuries sustained by falling while alighting from a sleigh on Friday last. He went around attending to business as usual on Friday and Saturday but on Sunday was unable to leave his bed. He is being cared for by Dr. Dunlop, of Crookston and Dr. McDonald, of Minneapolis, and it is to be hoped that he will soon be entirely recovered.

Roy Green and Dan Lynch had an exciting wolf hunt on Wednesday. Roy had wounded the animal on Tuesday evening and on Wednesday they took up his trail. They followed him for several hours and though they saw him several times they failed to get a shot at him until late in the day. They were pretty well tired out but they got the wolf at last.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

President Roosevelt sent a message to congress denouncing Joseph Pulitzer for the Panama canal charges and saying it is the duty of the government to prosecute the publisher of the New York World for criminal libel. The World replied with an editorial of defiance.

Charles M. Schwab, former head of the steel trust, argued before the house ways and means committee that the tariff on steel should not be reduced.

The senate received a message from the president reasserting the guilt of discharged negro soldiers in the Brownsville affair, but saying he was willing they should be reinstated if they would confess, and promising immunity to those who did so. Senator Foraker attacked the course of the president and the government.

Secretary of Agriculture Wilson reported that farm products for 1908 eclipsed all records, being valued at 7,778,000,000, with corn in the lead.

The National Rivers and Harbors Congress at its concluding session, by a resolution, which was one of a series adopted, declared for an authorized issue by congress at its present session of $500,000,000 worth of bonds, the proceeds to be used in the payment exclusively for such river and harbor work as may be authorized by congress, provision for the issue to be similar to the Panama canal bonds.

The house adopted a resolution providing for the naming of a committee to consider the proper means of dealing with the part of the president's message relating to the secret service and reflecting on members of congress.

President Roosevelt declared that if the [illegible] of the Panama canal graft charges could be reached for criminal libel he would try to reach them. William Nelson Cromwell branded the stories as absolute falsehoods.

Members of congress who resent President Roosevelt's language in the part of his message concerning the secret service planned to rebuke him.

Senor Arosemana, minister from Panama, presented his credentials to President Roosevelt.

That the outbreak of the foot and mouth disease now prevalent in several states was due to the importation into this country of either biological products or such material as straw or merchandise, or in the clothes or effects of immigrants, is the opinion of Secretary Wilson.

NATION IS LIBELED

PRESIDENT AGAIN DENOUNCES THE CANAL CHARGES.

MESSAGE TO THE SENATE

Roosevelt Uses Strong Language Concerning New York World and Joseph Pulitzer—Wants Latter Prosecuted.

Washington.—President Roosevelt Tuesday afternoon sent to the senate a statement concerning the purchase of the Panama canal property by the United States, denouncing in strong language charges that there was anything wrong in the acquisition by the United States of the Canal property.

"These stories," he continues, "were first brought to my attention as published in a paper in Indianapolis, called the News, edited by Mr. Delavan Smith. The stories were scurrilous and libelous in character and false in every essential particular. Mr. Smith shelters himself behind the excuse that he merely accepted the statements which had appeared in a paper published in New York, the World, owned by Mr. Joseph Pulitzer. It is idle to say that the known character of Mr. Pulitzer and his newspaper are such that the statements in that paper will be believed by nobody; unfortunately, thousands of persons are ill informed in this respect and believe the statements they see in print, even though they appear in a newspaper published by Mr. Pulitzer."

"The charges form, partly, a libel upon the United States government. I do not believe we should concern ourselves with the particular individuals who wrote the lying and libelous editorials, articles from correspondents, or articles in the news columns. The real offender is Mr. Joseph Pulitzer, editor and proprietor of the World. While the criminal offense of which Mr. Pulitzer has been guilty is in form a libel upon individuals, the great injury done is in blackening the good name of the American people. It should not be left to a private citizen to sue Mr. Pulitzer for libel. He sholud be prosecuted for libel by the government authorities. In point of encouragement of iniquity, in point of infamy of wrong-doing, there is nothing to choose between a public servant who betrays his trust, a public servant who is guilty of blackmail, or theft, or financial dishonesty of any kind, and a man guilty as Mr. Joseph Pulitzer has been guilty in this instance. The attorney general has under consideration the form in which the proceedings against Mr. Pulitzer shall be brought."

The president also transmitted numerous documents that relate to the purchase of the canal property from the French company.

TOBACCO COMBINE ILLEGAL.

Federal Circuit Court Decree Orders Trust to Dissolve.

New York.—Nine companies, with their subsidiaries, are named as constituting an illegal combination in the final decree, filed Tuesday in the United States circuit court, putting into effect the judgment recently obtained by the government in its suit to dissolve the so-called tobacco trust.

The companies named are the American Tobacco Company, the American Snuff Company, the American Cigar Company, the American Stogie Company, MacAndrews & Forbes Company, P. Lorillard & Co., R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, Blackwell's Durham Tobacco Company and the Conley Foil Company. Each of the first five of these companies the court declares is in itself a combination in violation of law.

The order enjoins these companies from continuing as parties in the combination and restrains them from engaging in interstate or foreign trade until "reasonable competition" between them is restored. Appeals by both the government and the defendants will act as a temporary stay of the decree.

"IK MARVEL" PASSES AWAY.

Donald G. Mitchell, Well-Known Author, Dies, Aged 84.

New Haven, Conn.—Donald Grant Mitchell, 84 years old, the well-known author who wrote under the nom de plume "Ik Marvel," died at his home, "Marvelwood," in Edgewood, a suburb of this city, Tuesday night. At the bedside at the time of Mr. Mitchell's death were his sons, Harold of New London and Walter of Newark, and his daughters, Mrs. Walter Hart of Rye, N. Y.; Mrs. Mason Hoppin and the Misses Elizabeth, Bessie and Harriet Mitchell, all of New Haven.

Dorando Collapses; Longboat Wins.

New York.—As on that memorable occasion of his first Olympiad, Dorando Pietri collapsed within sight of the goal Tuesday night and Tom Longboat, the Indian runner, who had been led by a yard or more nearly all the way, won the Marathon race at Madison Square garden.

Leaves Vast Fortune to Family.

New York.—By the provision of her will, filed for probate here Tuesday, Miss Mary G. Pinkney, who owned real estate valued at from $40,000,000 to $50,000,000 in Harlem, leaves only $1,000 to persons outside of her immediate family.

Victim of the Clemson Found.

Grand Marais, Mich.—The first body to come ashore from the lost Wolvin line steamer, D. M. Clemson of Duluth, was found Tuesday in the surf by two lighthouse keepers from Crisp Point.

PRES. NORTHROP RESIGNS

EMINENT INSTRUCTOR DESIRES TO RETIRE.

Having Reached the Age of 74 Years He Believes a Younger Man Should Take the Burden.

President Cyrus Northrop of the University of Minnesota, whose resignation after 25 years of service was tendered to the board of regents at the annual meeting Tuesday, and its acceptance declined, has not decided whether to enforce the acceptance of his resignation.

When questioned as to his action Dr. Northrop would make no definite statement as to whether he would accede to the request of the board of regents and withdraw his resignation.

The matter will come up again at the next meeting of the Regents.

Nothing is known of the action that will be taken by the regents with regard to the resignation, but it is probable that the request of President Northrop will be granted. It is probable that he will be given the title of president emeritus.

Dr. Northrop has no plans for the future and will take a long rest before attempting any further work of any kind. It is probable that he will make a prolonged visit abroad.

Some weeks ago rumors of Dr. Northrop's intention to resign were current but at that time he denied them in strong terms, declaring there was absolutely no truth in any statement that he was contemplating the step he has just announced his intention of taking.

Dr. Northrop, lawyer, editor, author, Yale professor and second president of the University of Minnesota, has permanently associated his name with the notable growth of the university and with the advancement of education throughout the Northwest.

During the twenty-five years that he has directed this institution he has seen it rise from the rank of an academy, or, at best, a minor college with 300 students and one building, to the rank of a true university with 4,000 students and twenty buildings. Under his sagacious control the attendance at the university has become the largest, with one exception, that is enjoyed by any state university in the United States. He has elevated the standard of scholarship moreover, to an equality with that of any other American university.

To his achievements as an educator he has added much successful labor in the fields of politics, literature and religion. He has impressed upon the state no less than upon the university, through his sterling, beneficent character, a personal influence that cannot be definitely gauged, but that is recognized by his associates as the best of tributes to his worth.

Born at Ridgefield, Conn., Sept. 30, 1834, Dr. Northrop attended introductory schools and an academy in his native town. At the age of 17 he entered Williston seminary, at Easthampton, Mass. A year later he became a student of Yale college. Having lost one year through illness, he was graduated in 1857. During his college career he was a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Skull and Bones, Delta Kappa Epsilon and Alpha Sigma Tau. He was the first president of the Brothers in Unity, a literary society that embraced half the student body. In 1859 he was graduated by the Yale Law school. While taking his law course he taught Latin and Greek at a private school in New Haven, and he also fitted two classes to enter the college.

In 1862 he withdrew from the legal profession to become editor of the New Haven Daily Palladium.

But another year had barely elapsed when he was called to adorn with his talents a third profession, being summoned quite unexpectedly to the chair of rhetoric and English literature at Yale. In this congenial station he remained twenty-one years.

Meantime during the Civil War and the days of "reconstruction," he again interested himself actively in politics and made many addresses. He was even a candidate for congress in 1867. He retired wholly from the political arena in 1876, except that he retained during the administration of President Hayes, the position of collector of customs at New Haven, to which office he was appointed by President Grant.

He was elected president of the University of Minnesota in 1884.

From Yale he received the degree of LL.D. in 1886; from Illinois college and the University of Wisconsin, in 1904; and from South Carolina college in 1905.

Always a prominent Congregationalist, he served as moderator of the national Congregational council at Worcester, Mass., in 1889, and at London, England, in 1891, as delegate to the international Congregational council, and as one of the two American vice presidents of this council.

On his 28th birthday Dr. Northrop was married, in 1862, to Miss Ann Elizabeth Warren, of Stamford, Conn. They have two children

Since he intended to devote himself to law, he entered an attorney's office after leaving Yale, and took his place at the Connecticut bar in 1860. He bore an active part in the campaign of that year, speaking in behalf of Lincoln at many towns in Connecticut and New York. He was elected at this time assistant clerk of the Connecticut house of representatives. The next year he was chosen clerk of the house, and a year later he was made clerk of the senate. During 1861 he practiced law at Norwalk, Conn.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

MATTERS OF INTEREST IN THE GOPHER STATE.

To Amend the Railroad Laws—Wins the First Prize on Wheat at Omaha.

Amend the Laws.

St. Paul.—The state railroad commission is preparing to notify the legislature next month that there is not a single railroad rate law in the state which can be enforced, and that amendments are absolutely necessary to make them effective.

Members of the commission have come to this conclusion as a result of the decision by the United States supreme court in the Young case. The highest court in the land approved the fine assessed against Attorney General Young for contempt, by Judge Lochren, on the ground that the state law he was trying to enforce was invalid. The reason for declaring the law invalid was that its penalties were excessive.

The court's language applied especially to the commodity rate law of 1907, which was drastic in the penalties invoked. It gave no option of a fine, but provided that every railroad official guilty of refusing to apply the maximum rates fixed in the bill should be subject to imprisonment for not more than ninety days for each offense.

Mid-Winter Fair.

Hamline—"I think a mid-winter fair could be made a success and would be of great educational value to the farmers and to the people of the state generally," said Dean E. Randall of the state agricultural school in speaking of the suggestion that such a fair, along the lines of the annual event at Guelph, Ontario, might be held at the state fair grounds.

"Of course it would entail a considerable expense at first, if the buildings at the fair grounds should be used, as a heating plant would have to be installed. A fair could be held in either one of the Twin Cities, but in that case it would not be so extensive as the one that could be housed in the buildings at the fair grounds.

"However, on first thought, I believe that such a fair would be as successful here as the Guelph fair, or the Omaha corn exposition, which are both held in the mid-winter."

Railway Building.

Duluth.—The total increase in mileage of the railroads in Minnesota for the year ending June 30, 1908, according to the annual reports of the various roads, is 145.27 miles. For the year previous the increase for all the roads was only 90 miles, so that the gain is large. The total mileage of the state now, exclusive of terminal and belt lines is 8,168.36 miles.

The largest increase was 49.40 miles of a new line on the Duluth, Rainy Lake and Winnipeg from Ashawa to International Falls. The figures of the railroad and warehouse commission show that in 1862 there was 10 miles of railway in the state. The increases by decades are: 1900, 3,332, 5,615, 7,166, and in 1908, 8,168 miles.

Minnesota Wins.

Minneapolis.—That Minnesota is the state where wheat is king is proved by the prize the Minnesota wheat exhibit won at the national corn exposition at Omaha, where Minnesota carried off sweepstakes in wheat. Prof. D. D. Mayne of the agricultural school received a telegram from Prof. C. P. Bull announcing the prizes.

Minnesota took first in clover and first in oats, and sweepstakes in wheat, which is a great showing for the state. Minnesota did not capture anything in corn.

Prof. C. P. Bull and L. B. Bassett of the agricultural school are the representatives from Minnesota, and have charge of the Minnesota exhibit at the exposition.

Miscellaneous Notes.

St. Paul.—The good roads committee of the Commercial club decided to ask the legislature for a bond issue of $200,000 for good roads in Hennepin county.

Winona.—John W. Dye, a former local young man, who for two years has been in the consular service of the United States at Berlin, has just been promoted to be deputy consul general at Genoa, Italy.

Minneapolis—That favorite Swedish American comedy, "Yon Yonson," which has been before the public for nearly twenty years, will be the attraction at the Bijou Opera House, Minneapolis, all of Christmas week.

Minneapolis.—Minneapolis police have been asked to search for Lord Herbert Russell of Bridgeport, England, who disappeared from a Chicago hotel ten days ago while en route to Spokane.

Mankato.—The Caledonian Curling club reorganized last night by electing Thomas Thompson president, Theodore Just vice-president, and George B. Owen secretary and treasurer.

Minneapolis.—Not guilty is the verdict of the jury in the second trial of William K. Hicks, secretary of the Minneapolis board of education, charged with accepting a bribe.

Washington.—Ole J. Laqua has been appointed postmaster at Puposki, Beltrami county, vice A. E. Smith, resigned.

Not Fair.

"Look here, Abraham," said the judge, "it's been proved right here in court that instead of doing something to help support your wife and children you spend your whole time hunting 'possum!"

The old negro hung his head.

"Now, Abe, you love your wife, don't you?"

"Ah suttinly does!"

"And your children?"

"Yas, suh!"

"And you love them both better—"

"Better ev'ry day, jedge!" Abe broke in.

"—better than a thousand 'possums?"

"Look hyah, jedge," exclaimed Abe, with widening eyes, "dat's takin' a coon at a pow'ful disadvantage!"—Bohemian Magazine.

The Story of a Happy Christmas

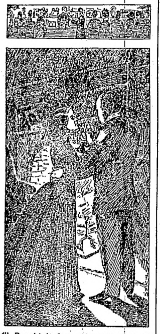
By MAGLYN DUPREC

(Copyright, 1908, by Short Story Publishing Co.)

It had not been easy for John Wellington, Sr., to select his Christmas gifts this year, although his old wife and one or two servants were all for whom he had to provide. It was Christmas eve, and he had been through bookstores, where handsomely bound volumes of story writers, philosophers and poets were displayed on every counter; through brilliantly lighted jewelry stores, where precious stones gleamed softly against backgrounds of rich velvet; through the perfumed shop of the florist, where delicate blossoms from famous greenhouses breathed forth a fragrance that gave the lie to the bitter wind and swirling snow outside. With each he had left a generous check, but always with an unsatisfied feeling that he was paying for something he did not care to have. Finally, he had been lured into a shop whose windows displayed an attractive lot of toys for small boys, and he had selected from its almost endless store of guns, wagons, wonderful animals and ear-splitting "wind instruments," a red tin horn, costing him only 25 cents.

This had given him more satisfaction than any purchase he had made for many times that amount.

The other parcels he had ordered delivered, but this he had carried himself, as though it were something too precious to be trusted to other hands. It was this that he unwrapped before the big, old-fashioned fireplace where his wife sat, as soon as he had come in from the storm-swept street. As he held it up where the red gleam of the firelight was caught on its rounded surface, a look of surprise swept over the gentle old face near him.



"I Bought It for a Memory, Mother."

"Why, John, you never bought that! Surely they handed you someone else's purchase."

"No," he said, his face growing suddenly tender, "I bought it."

His wife, with a woman's quick instinct, divined the reason. She stepped nearer to him and laying her hand on his arm, looked at him with pleading eyes, saying: "But why, father?"

It was the first time she had called him father for a decade past, and there was a pitiful break in the old man's voice as he replied: "I bought it for a memory, mother."

That was the first time in ten years he had called her mother, and at the sound of the name, she, too, gave way—gave way, womanlike, leaning her head on his arm, and sobbing out a grief that had silently stolen the roses from her cheeks and the light from her eyes as the years had gone by. The old man's arm went round her lover-fashion, while his hand gently stroked her soft white hair. "There, there, mother, dear. The boy's not dead. I'll find him for you, if I have to hunt the world over. I was to blame," he said, with such infinite regret in his voice that the old wife reached up and drew his head down to her face and whispered: "Don't take it so, father. I know you thought you were doing the best for the boy when you sent him away to do or die on his own account, and somehow I feel tonight, as I have never felt before, that he may be found."

As she spoke, something in her tones made him feel that at last his wife had forgiven him entirely for the decision which, ten years before, had robbed her of her only child. Always before this he felt through all her gentle and kindly care for him, that tucked away somewhere in the silent recesses of her being there was just a little bitterness against him for the childless state he had brought upon her. But now that he, himself, had come to repent it, he knew beyond a doubt that the last drop of that bitterness had been swallowed up in a grief grown sweet from being shared.

He sat down in his great arm chair and looked up with misty eyes at his wife. "You're right, mother. I did think it best. I would rather have seen him dead than worthless, and I knew if he had worth, he would conquer himself, and rise without my aid, more of a man than with it." She put her arm around his neck and patted his cheek. "He has risen somewhere, father. I know it. He could not be your son and fail," she said, the loyalty and love of a lifetime lighting her face with a soft radiance.

He took up the tin horn from the table where he had laid it, and fondled it as if it were fraught with memories, instead of merely recalling them.

"It's ten years since he left," he said, "what a man he must be now—31 to-night. But I was thinking, when I bought this, of the time when he was such a little yellow-haired toddler, and almost drove us wild with just such a horn as this at Christmas time."

She took the horn from him, and looking dreamily at it, said: "We'll keep this, father; maybe Jack's boy will some time make these old walls ring with it at Christmas time as he made them ring, himself, so many years ago."

"God grant that he may!" said the old man. "Do you remember, mother, how he used to come chasing down the street after me when I would start off to my work in the morning?"

"Yes, and how you would pick him up and carry him back to me," she said. "And do you remember the time we came near losing him, the day he ran away to hunt you in the city?"

"Who that saw you then could forget it, mother?" and he took her hand in his and drew her down to the chair beside him. They sat hand in hand in the silence, given over to voiceless memories of the past, only the ticking of the old clock keeping an accompaniment to their dreams of other Christmas Eves. They were sitting thus an hour later when a servant opened the door and said, respectfully: "There is a telephone call for Mr. Wellington."

"Can't you answer it, Mary?" the old man asked, loath to leave his comfortable chair and dreams.

"No, sir. It is especially for you. A long-distance call, I think."

"Who the deuce wants to talk to me from a distance," he said, as he rose and went to the telephone in the hall.

"Hello, who is this?" he asked, as he picked up the receiver. "Yes, this is John Wellington."

"A party in Chicago wants to talk to you," said the long-distance operator.

"All right, put him up. Who in thunder do I know in Chicago," he ejaculated to himself, pressing the receiver closer to his ear.

A peculiar wailing sound was all he heard, and a puzzled expression crept over his face. "Talk a little louder. I can't understand a thing you are saying," and he listened more intently. The wailing grew a little louder, but still it was nothing but an inarticulate wail, and for a moment the old man looked thoroughly disgusted.

"Confound it!" he shouted at last. "You sound exactly like a mewling infant. I don't know what you are saying."

Then a man's laugh was heard, followed by "A merry Christmas, father. You know exactly what he sounds like, but you don't know what he is saying," and there was another laugh, ringing joyful, as in his boyhood days, and the old man knew he had found his own.

"Jack, Jack, my boy, is that you?" he shouted, staggered by the unexpected joy of his sudden discovery.

"None other, father, but what you just heard was another Jack, the second Jack Wellington, Jr. He has just arrived, and his command of English is somewhat limited, but he was doing his best to introduce himself, and invite you and grandma to Christmas dinner with him, and—"

"Oh, Jack, Jack, where have you been all these years?" sobbed the old man.

"Catch the Lake Shore Limited tonight, father, bring mother with you, and I'll tell you all about it when you get here. You've got time. You see, father, I've kept track of you and mother all along. I wasn't going to let anything happen to the old folks, and—" there was a catch in his voice, "I've got the right kind of a report to make, father. Never fear that."

The old man could scarcely contain himself as he listened, pressing the receiver closer and closer to his ear, as though he feared some bit of the precious news might escape him. Then he shouted: "All right, son, we're coming on the next train." He left the receiver dangling on the wall, and started on a run to the room where his wife sat, shouting as he went: "Mother, mother, it's Jack—our boy. Get ready, mother. I'm going to have a cab here in 20 minutes to catch the train for Chicago." She had risen with a wild look on her face, and had started to question him, but he shook his head, saying: "No, no, I'll explain later. Not got time now. We're going to spend Christmas with Jack and his boy."

He started for the 'phone again, and then dashed back, exclaiming: "Pack the tin horn if you don't pack another thing. Any child that can cry loud enough to be heard all the way from Chicago ought to have breath enough to blow that horn," and he dashed again to the 'phone to order a cab.

Christmas Dinner by Toboggan Express

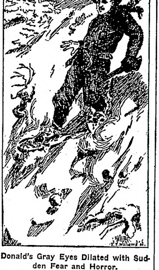
By

ALVAH MILTON KERR

(Copyright, 1908, by W. G. Chapman.)

Donald Saunders had his first great adventure up in the Long's Peak country, a region famous throughout Colorado for heavy snows and avalanches. Donald came over from Denver, after graduating from high school, to spend the summer with Sumpter Saunders, his father's youngest brother. Sumpter was a very young uncle, indeed, being but 27 and not very long out of college, while Donald was 19. "Uncle Sump" was a big-boned, strapping fellow who had played center in his college football team, a man with laughing blue eyes and "teasing" ways but entertaining serious dreams of owning a great mine, if strength and pluck and persistence would bring one to light. He was running a tunnel on what he believed to be an excellent gold-bearing prospect, up in the Long's Peak country. Donald went out to help him. The tall boy had notions of becoming a mining engineer, and here was experience that might prove of value when he should be ready to enter a technical school.

The world is very much in confusion up in that country, the earth having been flung about at all sorts of angles, heaped and ragged and tumbled. Streams sprawl in foamy abandon through the canyons and the clumps of pines on the soaring steeps sing cheerily in the wind and sun. Donald found it all quite magical.



Donald's Gray Eyes Dilated with Sudden Fear and Horror.

He had purposed returning home to Denver in the autumn, but Sumpter having offered him an interest in the mine, should they succeed in striking quartz, he concluded to remain at least until Christmas. Donald's father, knowing the value of practical experience, thought it quite as well that his son should stay and rough it for awhile.

There were deer and bear and mountain grouse in that lifted, broken region, but the two young fellows had little time for hunting them, being intent on driving the tunnel as rapidly and with as little delay and expense as possible. Sumpter had built a cabin close against the base of a perpendicular wall of rock at the side of the canyon in which his claim lay. In this cabin they lived very snugly, going down to Ward occasionally to bring up supplies. Donald had come up to that country over a little railroad that runs from Boulder to Ward, a bit of track upon which the snow rotary plows are busy most of the winter.

Towards Christmas the young miners began to grow a bit lonesome and restless; they especially grew weary of ham and tinned meats and longed for venison, bear, beef, or almost any sort of flesh food that was fresh. Snow was heavy on the mountains and they could get about but little save upon snowshoes. Donald wished very ardently that he might go home for Christmas but made up his mind that to leave Sumpter in that white, lonely world would be selfish and cowardly, so he remained.

Christmas morning Donald put on his snowshoes and, flinging Sumpter's rifle across his shoulder, he declared he was going to look for fresh meat. His uncle laughed at him but the hardy Scotch youth was resolute.

"An old hunter," he said, "told me at the hotel down in Ward, the last time I was down, that a lot of deer wintered in the big thickets just back of us here; he said they were hard to get at but he'd found them there twice. I'm going up to see." Sumpter assented reluctantly, cautioning his nephew not to go too far away.

The day was soft and mild, the white world all agleam with sunshine. Donald put on a pair of smoked glasses and started up the canyon. A half mile away he found a little "draw," up the slope of which he climbed until he came out upon the gleaming side of the mountain; thence he made his way slowly westward, passing around upheaving masses of dark stone, across slopes that were smooth as white satin, and, still further up the mountain side, found little hollows, evidently lined with brush but now filled with snow, simply big, glistening dimples in the mountain's fat face; but he saw no deer.

Finally, being weary of laboring through what was very much like an infinite bed of glittering down, he reached a point on the steep slope apparently a quarter of a mile or so directly north of the cabin. As he stood there debating if he should return to the "draw" or attempt to find a more direct route to the floor of the gulch, he suddenly felt himself moving. His first thought was that an earthquake was swaying the mountain or that he himself had been seized with vertigo. Then with a wild thrill he perceived that a strip of snow 200 feet wide and perhaps 500 feet in length was moving down the mountain side!

Donald's gray eyes dilated with sudden fear and horror. He was thrown headlong in the snow, hearing as he fell the crunch of stones that were being ripped out of their beds and the crash and rending of stumps and roots as they parted from their sockets in the earth. With every pulse leaping in alarm he got to his feet, toppling and reeling and shouting for aid as he glanced about him. The next instant he was again thrown headlong. He was upon the back of a steed beside which the fabled Horse of Death was as an insect. Something went through his brain like a sheet of flame, in it a picture of Sumpter sitting by the open fire of pine logs down in the cabin, a book in his hand, undreaming of this ruthless monster rushing down to crush him.

The next moment Donald was again upon his feet, pitching and clutching at the air and shouting. In that moment he saw a very amazing thing, though everything was both amazing and not amazing as in some sort of indescribable dream. A hundred feet to the rear of him, almost at the upper tip of the avalanche, he saw a bear rolling and tossing on the hurling mass. Thrown out of its hibernating bed among the rocks or decaying tree-roots, the animal was pitching about, now upon its feet then upon its back, helpless as a fly upon an ocean surge. Donald never knew why, but he shouted at the bear, and he never could recall afterwards exactly what it was he shouted. He says now that he thinks he commanded the bear not to roll down upon him, which was certainly absurd.

In his mind were many glancing thoughts. In such moments the mentality of man sometimes seems as a diamond with many facets. He thought of the Christmas tree to be lighted in the parlor at home in Denver, of how tired he was of corned-beef, of where they would bury him when they took him crushed and dead from the snow at the bottom of the gulch, whether or not his school fellows if they now saw him would shout "Slide, Donald, slide!" as they used to when he was running the bases when playing ball, and many other things, all, seemingly, in a single moment.

It must have been a very short period in which he was leaping and tumbling and whirling about on the mighty toboggan, for the avalanche ran down the mountain side like a swiftly hurrying snake, save that its undulations were up and down instead of sidewise as with a serpent. It seemed to Donald he had scarcely drawn six breaths before the snowslide shot from the precipice above the cabin. Swift as was his flight he was conscious that the slide had leaped from the canyon wall, for throughout a few seconds there was no noise and he seemed being borne upon a bed of feathers through space, then there was a roar as of muffled thunder and he was wallowing deep in snow.

The mental picture that had flashed through Donald's mind of his young uncle sitting by the fire engrossed in a printed romance, had been true to the fact. Sumpter had awakened to the coming of the avalanche only when it neared the brink of the wall, 70 feet above the cabin. His book dropped from his hand and he made a leap for the door. The next moment a bear crashed through the roof and smote the floor in front of the fire, leaving the luckless animal lifeless. Sumpter's face blanched as he stared at the strange object, then he thought of Donald and hurriedly pushed his way out of the door. The snow about the cabin was up to his neck and the roof was piled deep with it, but the bulk of the slide had leaped clear over the little house, heaping the bottom of the gulch to the opposite wall, some 600 feet away. The bear had dropped from the tail of this rushing mass directly upon the cabin.

When Sumpter had got his frightened nephew out of the smother of stuff in which he was floundering, the two young fellows stood with pale faces staring at each other for a little space, then both, seeing what they had escaped, laughed joyously.

"Come into the cabin," said Sumpter, "we will have broiled bear steak for Christmas dinner! Too many snowslides around here now; to-morrow we will pull out for Denver. In the spring we will come back and tunnel until we strike the vein."

All of which came true.

"About four years ago I had a very severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism. My skin peeled, and the high fever played havoc with my hair, which came out in bunches. I also had three large bed sores on my back. I did not gain very rapidly, and my appetite was very poor. I tried many 'sure cures' but they were of little help, and until I tried Cuticura Resolvent I had had no real relief. Then my complexion cleared and soon I felt better. The bed sores went very soon after a few applications of Cuticura Ointment, and when I used Cuticura Soap and Ointment for my hair it began to regain its former glossy appearance. Mrs. Lavina J. A Knocker is about the worst thing for any community, and some knockers are worse than others. There is the chronic knocker but no one who knows him pays any attention to him. The hypocritical knocker is worse. He will sometimes make an awful bluff at boosting around home while he is doing the most scientific kind of knocking to people in other places. We expect to have something to say abont this class later on, and the time is not very far distant either.

Congressman Steenerson has already become one of the most prominent of the members of congress since the opening of the present session last week. He has accomplished this by drafting and introducing a bill for a Postal Savings Bank system which has the endorsement of both the Department and the administration, and which is very likely to become a law. His bill provides that state as well as national banks may become depositaries for funds deposited with postmasters, and also that money deposited in postal savings banks may be invested in municipal securities of sound character and acceptable to the postmaster general. Municipalities established for a period of five years and on a sound foundation may offer their bonds to postal savings bank depositaries. One dollar will start an account, but no sums greater than $500 are to be deposited. Trustees, agents and syndicates are prohibited from depositing, the idea being to make postal banks a medium for individual safety deposits.

Bad Fire at Mentor.

On last Monday evening a destructive fire visited the village of Mentor and before the flames could be controlled the Wadekamper store, Coffers hardware store, Jens Olson's feed store, a barber shop and a residence were totally destroyed. The fire is supposed to have started from an over-heated stove in Wadekamper's general store. The total loss is estimated to be about $15,000 partly covered by insurance. It is expected that all the buildings destroyed will be replaced with new ones.

By Way of Excuse.

News seems scarce in these columns this week, doesn't it? Well, news is scarce. Everybody is too busy having a good time, and that's the proper thing. In this shebang we have to do our own cooking and eat it because our better half is absent; our assistant in the printing office is away spending Christmas with the home folks; we are publishing a lot of county commissioners proceedings and mailing them out to the taxpayers of the county. Incidentally we have been handling the heaviest line of Christmas mail ever received in this postoffice; and in general trying to help everybody else have a good time. And, by the way, we are having a good time ourselves in doing these things because we have no time to worry over the good things we are missing. Anyway, we are not going to do any kicking and we hope our readers will feel that way about it too.

Dr. Clark was called out yesterday afternoon to the vicinity of High[illegible]ing to attend a little boy, the [illegible] child of Mr. and Mrs. B. H. C[illegible] who is quite ill.

A grand New Year's ball will be given at the Opera house in Red Lake Falls, on next Thursday evening, the 31st inst. The music will be furnished by the Red Lake Falls orchestra and supper served at the Grand View Hotel. Are you going?

The good people out at Garnes will give a fine Christmas tree at the school-house in the Swan Olson district, one mile east of Garness, on next Monday evening. They intend to have the best kind of a time and a big crowd of old and young is expected to attend.

Mrs. D. Thompson, of Denver, Col., is spending the holidays with the family of her brother, K. A. Henderson, in Kratka township. After the holidays she will go to Porter, Sask., for a visit with her daughter who resides there and whom she has not seen for about ten years.

On Thursday evening the pupils of the Plummer school enjoyed a very fine Christmas tree and program in Carlson's hall. There was about thirty of the children that took parts in the play and W. T. Sawyer, of the Pioneer office, made a very creditable Santa Claus. The affair was an entire success and reflects great credit on the teacher, Miss Irene Caldwell, under whose managment it was planned and carried out. We regret that lack of time prevents our going into full details.

Shiraz, Xeres and Sherry.

Sir Henry Drummond Wolff's knowledge of Spain and of Persia is shown in the following paragraph taken from his "Rambling Recollections:"

"In Persia no wine is manufactured for sale except at Shiraz. When Persia was invaded by the Arabs they took back with them to Morocco the grapes of the district. In Spain they wished to naturalize the new fruit, and this they did at a place called Xeres, intended for Shiraz, there being no sound equivalent to 'sh' in Spanish. There they cultivated the grape and made wine, which now returns to Europe as 'sherry,' that word being a paraphrase of Shiraz. Shiraz wine is very similar in taste to sherry."

Fickleness In Penmanship.

Speaking of check signatures and forgery, a downtown paying teller remarked: "One of the most peculiar points in our business is one little comprehended by the public. I mean the embarrassment caused by the man whose signature is seldom the same, or nearly so, two weeks in succession.

"This fickleness is not intentional. It is in almost every case temperamental. The man guilty of it is generally nervous and not infrequently is greatly lacking in stability of character. At times you, as a layman, would hardly believe it possible that his signature on two different checks was the work of the same hand.

"Of course we come to know these cases in time, and there are always certain characteristics in a person's handwriting which the expert can detect and which go far to convince. Nevertheless the changeable signature is a nuisance and involves an added peril."—New York Globe.

The Cricket's Chirp.

The variation of speed in the chirping of crickets depends so closely on temperature that the height of the thermometer may be calculated by observing the number of chirps in a minute. At 60 degrees F. the rate is eighty chirps a minute, at 70 degrees F. 120 per minute, and the rate increases four chirps to the minute with a change of one degree. Below a temperature of 50 degrees F. the cricket is not likely to make any sound.

His Modest Request.

A man once asked Thackeray to lend him 5 shillings, which he would convert into £20,000. Asked how, he explained that he knew a young woman with £20,000 who he knew would marry him if he asked her, but he had pawned his teeth and wanted 5 shillings to redeem them in order to propose effectively.

Speaking of checks [illegible] and forgery, [illegible] paying teller remarked: "One of the most peculiar points in our [illegible] little comprehended by the public. I mean the [illegible] caused by the man whose signature [illegible] time, or nearly so, two weeks in succession.

"This fashion [illegible] not intentional. It is in almost every case [illegible]. The men guilty of it are generally nervous and not infrequently [illegible] lacking in stability of character. At times you, as a layman, would hardly believe it possible that his signature on two different checks was the work of the same hand.

"Of course we come to know these cases in time, and there are always certain characteristics in a person's handwriting which the expert can detect and which go far to convince. Nevertheless the changeable signature is a nuisance and involves an added peril."—New York Globe.

The Cricket's Chirp.

The variation of speed in the chirping of crickets depends so closely on temperature that the height of the thermometer may be calculated by observing the number of chirps in a minute. At 60 degrees F. the rate is [illegible] chirps a minute, at 70 degrees F. 120 per minute, and the rate increases four chirps to the minute with a change of one degree. Below a temperature of 50 degrees F. the cricket is not likely to make any sound.

CASTRO IS OUT, GOMEZ IS RULER

VENEZUELAN DICTATOR'S REIGN ENDS WITH FAILURE OF ASSASSINATION PLOT.

Nation's Nervy Acting Chief Personally Arrests Plotters and Assumes Full Powers. Castro's Letter of Credit Canceled.

Caracas, Venezuela, Dec. 22, via Willemsted, Curacao, Dec. 23.—The end of the rule in Venezuela of Cipriano Castro has come.

The dictator who has governed the republic with a rod of iron ever since he took forcible possession of the Yellow House in Caracas in 1899 is now openly charged with conspiracy to compass the assassination of a man he left at the head of the republic when he sailed away on Nov. 23 nominally to secure skilled medical aid in Berlin for a malady of long standand is to-day thoroughly discredited.

The Bank of Venezuela has cabled its correspondents at Berlin and Paris canceling the unlimited letter of credit given to President Castro when he left Venezuela for Europe, and no one in Caracas believes he will ever dare return to the capital.

The Castro cabinet has been forced to resign and a new and progressive ministry has been appointed by Juan Vicente Gomez, the acting president.

The attempt upon the life of Gomez was frustrated by the cool nerve and courageous daring of the acting president himself.

Alone and unsupported, he arrested the ringleaders of the conspiracy with his own hands in the presence of their armed adherants, and after this action he issued a proclamation saying that not only had he saved his own life, but he had maintained the higher ideals of the chief magistracy of the republic.

Those in the conspiracy were Castro's warmest adherents..

Already the new administration shows signs of a desire and intention to settle the disputes between Venezuela and certain foreign powers that have kept the republic in a light of unenviable notoriety for several years past.

TWO SUICIDES.

Two South Dakota Men Take the Short Cut.

Huron, S. D., Dec. 23.—Two suicides occurred last night. One was at Wolsey, when Lou Buck, of Wessington, hung himself in a coal shed with a rope of cords taken from banana crates. He was 50 years old, single, and for several months had run a butcher shop in Wessington.

The other suicide was Edward Prue, who came here from Pierre some weeks since, representing the Northwestern Insurance company of that city. He hung himself with a strap attached to a bedstead in his room in a hotel. He was 35 years old, believed to be single and having relatives in Massachusetts.

PITTSBURG SCANDAL.

Seven Councilmen and Two Bankers are Arrested.

Pittsburg, Dec. 23.—Following the sensational arrests here last night of seven councilmen and two bankers on charges of alleged corruption in conducting the public affairs of this city, it is intimated today that even more startling developments will transpire either today or by early tomorrow.

In the meantime the people of Pitsburg are surprised almost beyond description at the suddenness of the arrest of the nine men, who are well known.

Decision Rendered.

Bismarck, N. D., Dec. 23.—Judge Winchester's decision in the W. P. Tuttle divorce case was made known yesterday afternoon. A decree is given Tuttle upon settling $300 a month upon the wife, paying her $1,000 for counsel fees and $500 for court fees. The cross bill of Mrs. Tuttle is dismissed.

FAMOUS GOTHAM HOTEL BURNS.

Fire in Gilsey House Threatens to Destroy Structure.

New York, Dec. 23.—A fire which started in the Gilsey house, one of the famous hotels on Broadway, Tuesday threatened at first to destroy the building. Spreading through the fifth floor the flames soon were leaping out of the windows and a great crowd was attracted, which for a time completely blocked traffic on Broadway at that point. The firemen were able to confine the flames to the fifth floor and the fire was quickly controlled. There were not many guests in the hotel at the time, and it is believed there was no loss of life.

Killed by Her Own Automobile.

Waterloo, Ia., Dec. 23.—Seized with a sinking spell while driving an electric automobile Monday, Mrs. Clara Courtwright, aged 60 years, fell from the machine and was killed. When she fell the guiding lever of the machine was swung in such a manner as to cause the machine to circle the street twice, the wheels passing over her body both times and causing internal injuries from which she died six hours later.

No Hope for McQuaid.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

MATTERS OF INTEREST IN THE GOPHER STATE.

Official Figures of the Election—Layman Conference—Bounties for Tree Planting.

Official Figures.

St. Paul.—Figures issued by the state canvassing board show that J. F. Jacobson, Republican candidate for governor, received a total of 147,357 votes, a gain of 300 over the unofficial returns. Gov. Johnson received 175,136 votes, a gain of 100 over the unofficial count. The official majority of Johnson is 27,779. There is little change in the figures on the other candidates.

The totals on the state officials as issued by the state canvassing board show only occasional changes from the unofficial totals issued by Secretary of State Schmahl a month ago.

The official figures on state officers are:

Governor: Jacobson, 147,357, Johnson, 175,136, Haggard 7,024, Moore 6,516, Allen, 593.

Secretary of state: Schmahl, 175,564; Lamb, 96,561; Damon, 15,216; Lefevre, 10,939; Waterston, 2,024.

State treasurer: Dinehart, 179,867; Nelson, 103,330; Kolu, 12,394; Nordlaef, 2,861.

Railway and warehouse commissioner: Mills, 143,778; Elmquist, 140,804; Bjorge, 85,857; Mee, 81,404; Lindsay, 20,790.

The total number of those who registered was 388,262 males and 24,749 females. There were 355,263 ballots cast by males and 16,700 by females.

Laymen's Conference.

The Minnesota Conference of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, which is to be held at Minneapolis, Feb. 4-7, it is expected, will surpass in general interest any religious campaign ever held in the Northwest. It is to be state wide in its influence, as it is inter-denominational and inter-county in its organization.

It is distinctively a laymen's movement, inaugurated, financed and managed by them, with the sole purpose of quickening interest in missions and unifying the effort for evangelizing the non-Christian countries of the world.

The movement had a spontaneous beginning at New York two years ago and since then great meetings have been held in twelve cities of the south and west, in every city in Canada from Halifax to Vancouver, and last November in Boston.

Numerous representatives of missionary boards and missionaries, who are on furlough, are expected to attend and prominent speakers will address meetings to be held in a number of churches each day of the conference. There is also to be a dinner, at which Pres. Northrop, of the Minn. State University, will preside, which it is expected will be attended by many leading laymen of all denominations.

Among the prominent speakers expected are: Col. Elijah W. Halford, the founder of the Chicago-Inter-Ocean; W. T. Ellis, a newspaper correspondent of world-wide fame; J. Campbell White, regarded as the greatest foreign missionary speaker of this generation and E. F. Wilber, U. S. Consul at Halifax. Gov. John A. Johnson has signified his desire to take an active part.

Tree Planting.

St. Paul.—Suicide of James Dugan at Stillwater marks the last of the famous Rice street gang.

ABOUT THE LADY DOLPHINS.

Child's Inquiry Natural, Perhaps, to One of Her Sex.

A theatrical manager at the Players' club said of the school of classical dancing that Miss Isadora Duncan conducts:

"Miss Duncan hears some quaint remarks as she converses with her child pupils. One day, preparatory to the first lesson in a dolphin dance, she delivered to her class a little lecture on this fish. She described the grace of the dolphin, and afterward she described its habits and mode of life.

"'And, children,' she said, 'a single dolphin will have 2,000 offspring.'

"A little girl gave a start.

"'And how about the married ones?' she gasped."

ECZEMA ALL OVER HIM.

No Night's Rest for a Year and Limit of His Endurance Seemed Near —Owes Recovery to Cuticura.

"My son Clyde was almost completely covered with eczema. Physicians treated him for nearly a year without helping him any. His head, face, and neck were covered with large scabs which he would rub until they fell off. Then blood and matter would run out and that would be worse. Friends coming to see him said that if he got well he would be disfigured for life. When it seemed as if he could possibly stand it no longer, I used some Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment, and Cuticura Resolvent. That was the first night for nearly a year that he slept. In the morning there was a great change for the better. In about six weeks he was perfectly well. Our leading physician recommends Cuticura for eczema. Mrs. T. C. Willadsen, of Manning, Iowa, writes to Mrs. Pinkham:

"I can truly say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound saved my life, and I cannot express my gratitude to you in words. For years I suffered with the worst forms of female complaints, continually doctoring and spending lots of money for medicine without help. I wrote you for advice, followed it as directed, and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it has restored me to perfect health. Had it not been for you I should have been in my grave to-day. I wish every suffering woman would try it."

NOT ALWAYS GOOD

PREACHER'S OPINION OF APPEAL TO "PRINCIPLE."

In His View the Stumbling Block to Reconciliation Between Erring Brethren Is In That Word Used by Stiffnecked.

The mud was almost hub-deep. The two strong horses drew the single carriage with reasonable comfort, but one horse might almost have stuck in the mud. Mr. Blake was driving to inspect one of his cheese factories; and only the fact that the thing had to be done accounted for his driving out with the roads in this condition. He had the road to himself, however; and he had the added satisfaction, if such it was, of remembering that it was the daily journeys of the milk-wagons to and from his several factories that plowed the mud to this bottomless condition.

Ahead, at the side of the road, he discovered a solitary figure walking. The pedestrian picked his way with some care, looking round from time to time at the approaching vehicle. As soon as he saw that it was a two-horse carriage with a single passenger, he stopped, selected a favorable approach to the roadway, and began cleaning the mud off his boots. By this time Mr. Blake recognized the eccentric Methodist preacher, Mr. Pepper.

"Good morning, Brother Pepper!" he called out to him. "How's the navigation?"

But Mr. Pepper did not answer; he merely stood till the carriage stopped, and climbed in between the muddy wheels.

"Glad to see you, Brother Blake," he said. "I've sunk down in the mud an average of one foot for every step, and I've come three miles; so I'm a mile deep in the mud. Those are good horses of yours. I like a good horse—two good horses—when roads are like this. You came at a good time. I'm very tired."

"What brings you so far when the roads are like this?" asked Mr. Blake.

"I'm coming down to try to reconsile two members who have had a quarrel," said Mr. Pepper.

"Well, if you get them reconciled by two o'clock you can ride back. I have to drive on to the farther factory, and I expect to return about that time."

Mr. Blake drove back past the house where he expected to find Mr. Pepper, and as it was after two o'clock, he concluded that the preacher had finished his task earlier than he expected and walked home. But as he was getting almost out of ear-shot, he was halted by loud shouts in a camp-meeting voice, augmented by two others of the amen-corner quality. He reined in the tired horses, and saw the preacher running toward the gate, shaking hands with both the men at once and giving them a parting admonition. Then he hurried through the mud to the carriage.

"You seem to have got them reconciled, but you nearly lost your ride," said Mr. Blake.

"Yes, yes!" puffed Mr. Pepper, scraping his boots against the iron step. "They're reconciled, but it was hard work."

He finished scraping his boots, and then took up his parable.

"Brother Blake," he said, "you can do almost anything with two men till they begin to say 'Principle! Principle!' More men go to hell with that word on their unforgiving lips than any other word in the dictionary.

"Let two men be just as mean as they know how to be, and know they've been mean, and show them their duty, and each will stop and quibble over some trifle, and say: 'It's a matter of principle with me!' When men begin to say: 'Principle! Principle;' I'd rather undertake to reconcile two fiends from the bottomless pit."

"How did you do it?" asked Mr. Blake.

"I reasoned with them, and prayed with them, and I got them both on their knees, and I thought a dozen times it was as good as settled, when one or the other would say 'Principle!' and the fat was all in the fire again.

"We'd have been there till doomsday, but the last time we rose from our knees I saw the carriage disappearing, and I said: 'There goes my chance of a ride home, and your day of grace is going, too. Let your principles go where they came from'—they knew where that was—'and shake hands and be brothers!' And they did it, and I said 'Glory!' and shouted for you to hold on and let me in. Most of what men call principles at such times are pure stubbornness."

Mr. Blake told the story many times in later years, and he was accustomed to say that he had come to believe that Brother Pepper told the truth.—Youth's Companion.

Guide Throttles Wolves in White House

WASHINGTON.—Real wicked and ravenous wolves, such as are supposed to chase the traveler through the woods on a cold, snowy winter night, were slain before the eyes of President Roosevelt in the east room of the White House the other evening, nothing but the naked hands being utilized to perform this feat.

The wolves were not stationary, but in actual motion. The entire affair was so realistic that some of the distinguished guests invited to witness the performance shied toward the windows, thinking they would rather chance a leap in the dark than the animals in sight.

John Abernathy, the far famed wolf killer and western guide, officiated as stage manager and did all the killing. His alone were the naked hands that stifled the panting breath of the unfortunate wolf. He has a reputation for doing this sort of thing and wanted to live up to it. He was successful.

Mr. Abernathy gave a lifelike exhibition of wolf hunting at the White House by the medium of a series of moving pictures. The slides illustrated a wolf hunt as conducted by Abernathy, who, in conquering his quarry, eschews the use of any deadly weapon.

Abernathy, who is now marshal of the state of Oklahoma, served as guide for the president on one of his recent hunting trips. Realizing the value of his spectacular exploits the wolf killer recently made a prolonged excursion into the woods, taking with him the facilities for procuring characteristic pictures. The result is about 6,000 feet of moving films which graphically portray the whole contest.

The exhibition was given on a huge canvas, arranged for the purpose and among the interested spectators were Prof. and Mme. Ferrero and George Shiras III., whose achievements as a "camera hunter" have engaged the attention of naturalists.

The president fully appreciated the performance and frequently clapped his hands, saying: "Fine!" "Grand!" "Splendid!"

New Faces Seen in House and Senate

PETTUS.
WHITE, MORCAN,
ALLISON, PROCTOR, MALLORY, DEATH

IN the make-up of the Sixtieth congress for this last short session there will be nine new faces—two in the senate and seven in the house.

In the senate Carroll S. Page has been elected by the Vermont legislature to the vacancy caused by the death of Senator Redfield Proctor, which had been temporarily filled, under gubernatorial appointment, by John W. Stewart.

The other new senator—a man whose name has figured in trans-Mississippi politics for a good many years—is Albert B. Cummins of Iowa, who takes the place of the late William B. Allison.

In the house the seven new men are: O. C. Wylie, Second Alabama district; Henry A. Barnhart, Thirteenth Indiana; Albert A. Estopinal, First Louisiana, John P. Swazey, Second Maine; Frank E. Guernsey, Fourth Maine; Otto G. Folker, Third New York, and Charles H. Burke, South Dakota, at large. Mr. Swazey takes the place of Charles E. Littlefield, for years one of the most prominent figures in the house. Mr. Littlefield resigned last spring.

The number of deaths during the present congress is three or four times the usual number for the same length of time.

The first man to fall since the opening of the Sixtieth congress was John T. Morgan of Alabama, who died June 11, 1907. A month later his colleague, Edmund W. Pettus, expired. December 23, 1907, stephen R. Mallory of Florida passed away. His successor was William J. Bryan, who died last March. Asbury C. Latimer of South Carolina died February 20, 1908, and March 4, 1908, Redfield Proctor of Vermont was added to the death roll. The next victim was William P. White of Maryland. The last and most illustrious of all was William B. Allison of Iowa, the undisputed leader of the upper house.

A noticeable feature in the long roll of deaths was the fact that most of the men who passed away were among the patriarchs of the senate. Senator Pettus was 86 years old; Senator White, 84; Senator Morgan, 83; Senator Allison, 79; Senator Proctor, 77; Senator Mallory, 60, and Senator Latimer, 57. Senator Bryan, however, was one of the youngest men in the senate. He was 32 years old when he died.

Sherman May Attend Roosevelt Church

WITH the retirement of President Roosevelt from office many people suppose that the German Reformed church on Fifteenth street will no longer be the center of interest which it now is on Sunday mornings. Interest may be lessened, but it is expected that Dr. Schick will still have a distinguished official to preach to in the person of Vice-President-elect James Schoolcraft Sherman. Like President Roosevelt, Mr. Sherman is a member of the Dutch Reformed church, an organization that has no place of worship in this city. He is a leading member of the Dutch Reformed church in his home town of Utica, N. Y., but he has never affiliated himself with any church of the capital city. It is thought that when he assumes the dignity of vice-president of the United States he will give his attention to religious matters to the extent of regularly attending divine service.

When Mr. Roosevelt first came to Washington, Dr. Schick, pastor of the German Reformed congregation, which occupied a modest little building hardly more than a chapel, wrote to him and said that as there was no Dutch Reformed church in Washington, he would be pleased if Mr. Roosevelt would worship with his flock.

Mr. Roosevelt was not then president of the United States. He wrote and said that he would come to his church, and nearly every Sunday morning he can be found in his pew taking part in the service and listening to Dr. Schick's sermons. Members of the congregation say that President Roosevelt has a liking for certain hymns and that he joins lustily in the singing of them. There is no choir in Dr. Schick's church, the music being rendered entirely by the congregation, led by the precentor.

It is thought that if Dr. Schick's attention is called to the fact that Mr. Sherman is in the same position religiously as was Mr. Roosevelt he will send him an invitation to become a member of his flock during his Washington residence.

Estimated Cost of Taking New Census

BILL OF EXPENSE
THIRTEENTH
CENSUS
$14.000.000

S. N. D. NORTH, director of the census, has written a letter to Secretary Straus, his immediate superior, asking for an appropriation of not less than $14,000,000 with which to take the thirteenth census in 1910. The cost of the last census, in 1900, exclusive of the four annual investigations and two biennial reports due the same year, was $12,520,000. The director estimates that the cost of the next census, due to the fact that he now has a regularly organized office, will be only $410,000 more than the census of 1900.

If the work can be accomplished for this sum, it will be the first time in the history of the nation that a census has been taken and compiled at practically the same cost as the prior enumeration. Formerly the increase in the cost of the census from decade to decade has been about 50 per cent., and on this basis the cost of the thirteenth census proper, exclusive of the four annual and the two biennial reports, would be $18,750,000, nearly $6,000,000 more than the director estimates the actual cost will be.

An important means of bringing about this saving is the fact that the bureau will build and own the necessary tabulating apparatus instead of renting it as heretofore. On July 1, 1905, the apparatus which had been used in tabulating the census of 1900 and which was owned and operated by a private company was withdrawn from the bureau of the census because the company and the director could not agree on the rental. The withdrawal of the machines compelled the director to ask congress for an appropriation for experimental work in developing new mechanisms to be owned, controlled, and operated by the government. The results of this experimental work have exceeded all expectations. The new mechanisms invented are novel in plan and design, are of greater speed and efficiency than those they supersede, and can be built and operated at a saving in money as compared with previous expenditures for this purpose.

STARS ON NEW FLAG

WERE ARRANGED BY CHARLES TALLMAN OF RICHMOND, ME.

His Services in the Army and Navy—Has Visited Ports In All Parts of World and Has Traveling Record of 350,000 Miles.

Boston.—It is not generally known that the person who suggested the arrangement for the stars on the United States flag, which became effective July 4 last, was a Maine man.

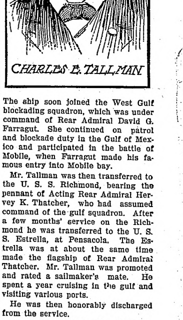
After the admission of Oklahoma to statehood Charles E. Tallman, U. S. N., retired, of Richmond, made a 16-inch flag with 46 stars and forwarded it to the state department at Washington.

The state department referred the matter to the navy department.

A few days later Mr. Tallman received notice to the effect that his arrangement was one of those which was being considered. Later it was officially announced that Mr. Tallman's arrangement had been selected.

Charles E. Tallman was born in Richmond, Me., March 14, 1842. On January 9, 1864, he enlisted for three years as a private in Company A, Capt. J. W. Spaulding, Nineteenth Maine volunteer infantry, which was commanded by Col. I. H. Stairbird.

He served but a short time in the army, being discharged at Brandy Station, Va., April 25, 1864, and transferred to the navy, where he first saw service at the Brooklyn navy yard, on board the U. S. R. S. North Carolina. In May, 1864, he was assigned to the U. S. S. Bienville, then at that yard.



The ship soon joined the West Gulf blockading squadron, which was under command of Rear Admiral David G. Farragut. She continued on patrol and blockade duty in the Gulf of Mexico and participated in the battle of Mobile, when Farragut made his famous entry into Mobile bay.

Mr. Tallman was then transferred to the U. S. S. Richmond, bearing the pennant of Acting Rear Admiral Hervey K. Thatcher, who had assumed command of the gulf squadron. After a few months' service on the Richmond he was transferred to the U. S. S. Estrella, at Pensacola. The Estrella was at about the same time made the flagship of Rear Admiral Thatcher. Mr. Tallman was promoted and rated a sailmaker's mate. He spent a year cruising in the gulf and visiting various ports.

He was then honorably discharged from the service.

On June 24, 1876, Mr. Tallman again enlisted in the navy. Six months later he was made a warrant officer, with grade of sailmaker.

In January, 1878, he was assigned to duty on the U. S. S. Ossipee, on board which vessel he cruised in the Caribbean sea. At Portsmouth, N. H., in November, 1879, he was assigned to the U. S. S. Ticonderoga, which was detailed on special service and carried important dispatches. In June, 1879, Mr. Tallman was detached from the Ticonderoga and placed on waiting orders until December, when he was ordered on duty on the U. S. R. S. Wabash, at the Boston navy yard.

In January, 1887, he went to the United States navy yard at Boston. He was assigned to duty in the storekeeper's department, and remained there until July, 1890, when he was placed on waiting orders.

In April, 1891, he was ordered to the U. S. S. Marion as fleet sailmaker to Rear Admiral G. E. Belknap. With the Marion as flagship Admiral Belknap joined the Asiatic squadron and cruised in the waters of China, Japan and the East Indies.

In 1894 Mr. Tallman was detached from the Marion, and returning home in May, 1895, he was attached to the gunnery schools at Washington, where he remained until November, when he was ordered on duty at the Portsmouth navy yard. He remained there until October, 1897, when he was retired.

In March, 1898, he was ordered to duty on the United States receiving ship Vermont at the New York navy yard. He was at this yard until after the close of the Spanish war.

On October 29, 1898, he was again retired from active duty in the United States navy by reason of disability in the line of duty.

During his terms of service Mr. Tallman visited ports in all parts of the world, and has a traveling record of 350,000 miles.

JAPAN'S UNIQUE NEW YEAR

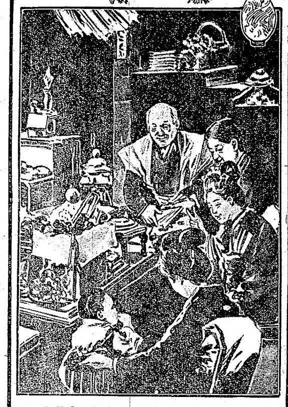
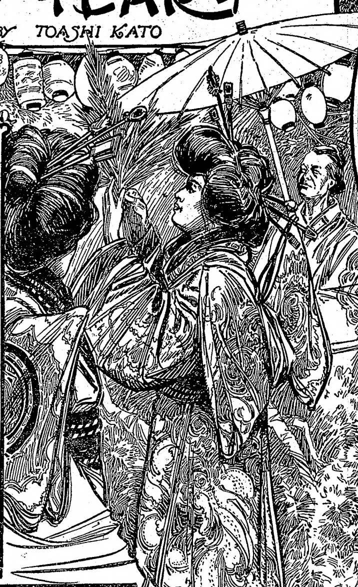
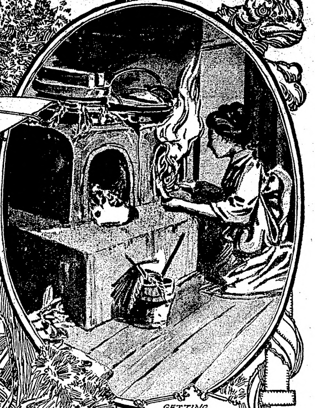
BY TOASHI KATO

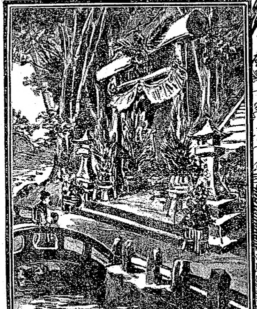


READY FOR THE FEAST

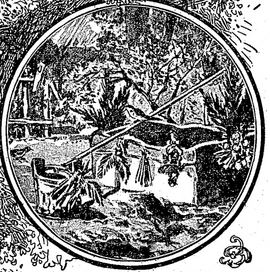




GETTING NEW YEAR'S DINNER READY



THE SHINTO TEMPLE



A DECORATED WELL

WE deeply pity the superstition of the Japanese. Yet there is something very beautiful in the archaic simplicity of their faith. Lafcadio Hearn found in Shintoism Greek religion transplanted in the midst of this material century. What he read and imagined in ancient literature he really found in this Land of the Rising Sun. For all the modernization of Japan there is one spot where the hand of the dissecting science has done but little damage.

Visitors from civilized and enlightened lands can go deep into the real life of the archaic society in Japan, and in the twinkling of an eye they can come back to the luxury of the twentieth century, and this archaic society is a living one and not an artificial miniature. Sympathy is aroused, as the faith is the only surviving remnant of the time-honored old religion. Political sentiment is touched, as Shintoism peoples woods, mountains, trees, rocks, rivers and seashores with gods and goddesses. Compassion is kindled as it is by a beautiful dawn slowly dissolving before the onslaught of the fierce daylight. No wonder, then, that Shintoism finds many lovers among westerners.

I would like to introduce the reader not indeed to the stately mausoleum and ceremony of Shintoism, but to the humble household of the common folk of Japan.

January in Japan is a month of rest and festival; rest after hard work and harvest; festival as an auspicious beginning of the year.

Before the end of the old year pine branches are set up by the gateways, shrines of gods, hearth, well and other places. These pine branches, signifying constancy, are hung with a straw ring made to imitate a jewel, with rays of light radiating from it, and stuck with a dried sardine, a leaf of evergreen, pieces of paper and a bit of edible seaweed. These rings are also put on almost all representative articles of furniture and kitchen implements, and this is said "to let them take one year." (This suggests that these articles were believed once to have had life and so have felt the advance of age.

The festival of "going over the year," or "Toshikoshi," is sometimes called "Toshitori," or "taking the year," and is a busy time for the housewife. She has to cook many different dishes, all of which have prosperous significance, besides her regular rice and bean soup.

Let me enumerate some. Soup of clam, which opens when cooked, signifies the opening out of the good fortune. Roe of herring, which is called "kazu-noko," or numerous children, forms a dish whose meaning is obvious. Health in Japanese is "mame," so beans must be eaten, as these happen to have the same sounding word for their name. Salt salmon, fish cake, pickled radish and many others must be prepared on this eventful eve, for we are going to add one whole year during the night. The kitchen is full of life, with kettles whistling and pots steaming, plates and trays all spread out. Children and even cats are very apt to be mischievous at such times, but they receive no scolding as the great festival should not be marred by discord and irritation.

When food is ready gods are served first with all these dishes, but only in miniature. Lights are put before them; sake liquor is offered in a pair of small vases, which, by the way, I have often seen used for flowers in America. Before the gods on the shelf they hang highly colored leaflets, each with a lucky meaning. One is the god of fortune under an auspicious gem, with a bagful of gold coins, coral and other precious things. Another has a bundle of edible seaweed, which is called "kobu." The phrase "to rejoice" in Japanese is "yorokobu;" so seaweed (kobu) means rejoicing. The last has under it a lobster. A person doubled up with age reminds one of a lobster with its doubled up waist. So the lobster quite often is picturesquely representative of "the aged of the sea."

When the family have bowed down before the gods they eat the great meal and a few rounds of sake were ceremoniously served in former days. Once you have eaten this feast you have added one year; and a child born in December is said to be two years old right after this meal. I used to be reminded by older people that I should be a better boy from the first of January, as I had added one year during that one night. They say that one night of the 31st of December is worth 50 days of usual days, and those who go to bed early this night will grow old that much in one night.

Polytheists are not troubled by a surplus of gods. The Japanese have already many gods at home and yet on New Year's day they buy printed gods. This paper is hung above the stone stove on which one cooks rice. One represents "year god," with thank offerings of rice, sake liquor, kneaded rice and regular New Year decorations of evergreen trees. The figure is Buddhist; the original Shinto god has long been replaced by a boddisatwa, showing the result of usurpation of Shintoism by Buddhism, effected by a Buddhist priest Kobo, as a means of Buddhist propagation. These offerings were once real ones, but the Japanese learned how to economize labor and expense by printing, and the goddess herself came into the picture.

Another picture is also hung before the shelf. The central figure is Prince Shotoku, the famous patron of Buddhism in its early days in Japan. A Japanese spade, stalks of rice on a tray, thresher, sake liquor and cooked rice are the offerings. A pair of foxes need a little explanation. Originally they belonged to a very popular Shinto god whose place has been usurped through the strategy of Kobo, and this Buddhist prince has been substituted. But religious degeneration has gone on further and these foxes came to be mistaken for the god itself. And Inari worship (for Inari is the name of the god) is seen nowadays in its most degraded form of fox worship.

Others are a pair of salesman's gods. Who they originally were has very little to do with the present worship. Anyhow, as gods of good luck and prosperity they are worshiped in New Year's season, and almost every shop has these idols in stock.

Early on the first of January New Year's callers begin to pour in. What do they say? With heads bowed down and hands on the sill, they mumble: "Congratulations for the opening of the new year, and pray that it will be continued in future." This phrase is so common that both sides speak at the same time, and yet both are well understood. One says: "Won't you come in?" "No," answers the other; "I have more houses to call." "Then come when you are through," and the caller goes. If the caller should come in he is sumptuously feasted with food and drink, and you see more open drunkenness on New Year's day than at other times.

Superstitious people find omens and meanings in dreams, and the Japanese must have good dreams to begin the year. For this purpose they put a piece of paper under the bed. On this paper a Japanese junk is printed, loaded with precious goods, her sails outspread, on her decks men busy with rigging and oars. A Japanese poem is also printed on it:

Na ka ki yo no,
To no ne fu ri no,
Mi na me sa me
Na mi no ri fu ne no,
O to no yo ki ka na.

Translated roughly, this means:

After a sound sleep of long night,
Resting awake in bed,
I hear a cheerful sound
Of a sailing vessel
Gliding over the billows.

The poem in translation loses its power of calling up associations. But one can imagine himself living near an inland sea, with its nooks, bays, and offings, pine groves and plum blossoms hanging over from the hilly shores, the sun as yet below the horizon, and in the mist he can discern a vessel gliding smoothly, leaving merry songs of sailors behind to be carried away by the spring breeze. This is considered an appropriate scenery to think over in the calm of the spring night. But this aesthetic association is little appreciated by the masses. They rather wonder at the clever construction of this poem, that reads just alike from either end. Read from the end and go back to the beginning, syllable by syllable; you have just the same result as if you read from the beginning.

Now, what kind of dreams are the best? First, Fugi mountain; second, eagle; third, eggplant; fourth, funeral; fifth, snakes—these are the five best ones. To dream of the horse is also auspicious. If a Japanese should happen to dream he is quite blue over the matter. These people, however, are not without the means of getting out of this misfortune. They say when they had a bad dream: "To the baku; to the baku." Now they did not know what "baku" was; they only knew that this mysterious animal living in a dreamy land lived on the dreams of man, and bad dreams were cast to the baku. It was a shock to these old fashioned people when their children told them that the teacher of zoology told the children that the baku is a hippopotamus and lived on substantial green leaves, and not on dreams. Such a revelation, though, cannot change the superstition, and people still say: "To the baku," to relieve their minds after a bad dream.

There is a record in history which shows that there was a custom once of selling and buying dreams. Once upon a time there was a prince in a famous house. He was thinking to court a maiden, and she had a strange dream, which she could not make out. She called in the help of her eldest sister. The latter, seeing the good omen of the dream, offered to buy the dream. An old mirror was the price and the bargain was made. Meanwhile the prince changed his mind quite suddenly, as if by magic, and paid his court to the eldest and won her hand. This prince is the famous Yaritomo, who founded the Shogunate, or military regency, in Japan.

Such is the story told and retold when the family get together by the fire box and spend the "long spring night" in merriment. I hope these humble doings of the common folk of Japan may find a warm reception among the readers of America.

Christmas Frolics.

A very effective and practical decoration for the table on Christmas morning is a pyramid of oranges with sprays of holly for a doily, with a scarlet ribbon running to the corners of the table fastened by a big orange at each corner. All the housekeeper's best efforts are usually expended on the dinner table, but it will only take a moment to arrange this. Place holly around the finger bowls. By the way, a dainty way to serve oranges for breakfast is to have the juice squeezed in the kitchen and served in a little glass which stands on a plate.

In the dining room that has to have a screen to conceal the kitchen, there may be a very simple and effective addition made to the Christmas decorations by pinning holly to it, covering the original surface completely. Lace curtains may be treated in this way to make lovely bits of color in the room or form a background for a tree.

HAIL THE NEW YEAR!

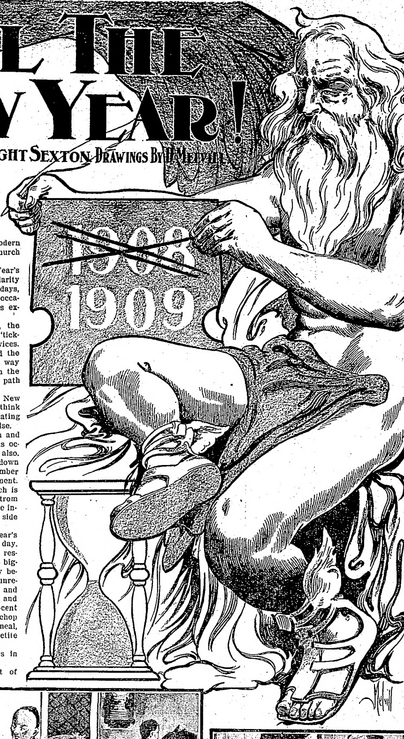
BY HOWARD ENRIGHT SEXTON. DRAWINGS BY H. MELVILL.



WHEN Father Time has erased "1908" and substituted "1909" upon his year ledger, then it is up to the Christian world to also turn over a new leaf in its life-ledger and start something new, even though it be nothing more modern than to promise to attend church periodically.

Despite the fact that New Year's eve comes with the same regularity that marks most people's birthdays, residents of big cities find it an occasion for as much hilarity as is exhibited election night.

In New York, for instance, the yelling thousands parade Broadway, carrying "ticklers," tin horns and scores of noise-making devices. Broadway on New Year's eve is jammed and the only way disinterested citizens may find their way peacefully to their homes is by scampering in the wake of street cars as the conveyances open a path through the mobs.

Broadway is invariably made the scene of New Year's eve hilarity. Gotham would as soon think of visiting Coney Island in the winter as celebrating the birth of the new twelvemonth anywhere else.

In Chicago, State street between Van Buren and Randolph is the scene of joyousness upon this occasion. "Ticklers," horns, etc., prevail there also. As on Broadway automobiles clatter up and down the street, tin cans trailing from the license number tags and beating a merry tattoo on the pavement.

The east side of Chicago's State street, which is the sunny side at noon hour is also the maelstrom of excitement New Year's. Those with peaceable inclinations will always be found on the west side on such occasions with faces pointed east.

New York annually goes crazy over New Year's eve, and it has a right, for none work the next day.

At New York's and Chicago's big clubs and restaurants, the coming of a new year means the biggest rush of the season. Before noon, the day before the advent of the holiday, there is not an unreserved table to be found at the clubs, hotels and eating houses. The aristocratic restaurants and millionaires' clubs are the mecca for the 20-cent appetite and the ten-dollar purse, while the chop suey houses, where "two bits" buys a square meal, are the gathering places for the ten-dollar appetite and the 20-cent purse.

Each class plays at the New Year's games in its own way.

OVER EXUBERANT

THE LESS ELITE IN A CHEAP CHINESE CHOP SUEY RESTAURANT

FASHIONABLES WATCHING THE OLD YEAR OUT AND THE NEW YEAR IN

However, they have in common the habit of standing up on their chairs and discordantly attempting to raise the roof when whistles of the factories and power houses toot the fact that the old year is in the death throes. That, of course, takes place at midnight. From that time until one a. m. the pandemonium is worse than the characterization which Gen. Sherman gave war.

After the hour following midnight, however, things begin to simmer down, the wise ones go home, visitors with the words "never again" on their lips spurt for their hotels, and those who are more hilarious than they would be had they anticipated earlier in the evening, are the only ones to continue the celebration. In ratio to the degree of hilarity is gauged the length of time which the "owls" celebrate.

About four a. m., the superintendent of police 'phones his outlying police stations the melancholy tidings: "Gather 'em in," and the round-up by patrolmen commences with the result that police court judges find dozens of "plain drunks" on the mental docket January 2.

Not remembering the circumstances of the New Year's eve celebration, the average citizen in that predicament just pleads guilty to disorderly conduct, complacently hears the justice pronounce "ten and costs" to the clerk and wearily wends his way homeward, a wiser and a sadder man, whose head beats like a triphammer.

But New Year's eve was not always thus. That is the twentieth century style. In the old days generations ago it was an occasion for worship, the family Bible being brought out and sacred passages read, while the more worldly of the family who had stiff-armed virtue in a mild fashion, turned over a new leaf and kept it turned.

Long, long ago, New Year's was not January 1, and authorities are still uncertain as to whether the present century is correct in its calculations.

Prior to 1752, in most legal and official matters and in private records, the year commenced on March 25. At this time an act of parliament was passed which "directed that the legal year, which then commenced in some parts of the country in March and in others in January, should universally be deemed to begin on the first day of January."

But it is not New Year everywhere at once. In fact, we shall see presently that some unfortunate individuals never get any New Year at all. As the clocks at Greenwich strike the first note of 12 at noon on December 31 the New Year is born at the opposite side of the earth—that is at all the places on longitude 180 east. But no one greets this first appearance unless it be the sailors of some solitary ship and the Fiji Islanders, for, besides the group, the only land which the magic imaginary line bisects is the inhospitable far east of Siberia, whose inhabitants keep the Julian calendar, and, therefore, hold their New Year celebrations 12 days later.

An hour and ten minutes after the day has darwed in New Zealand, the island continent of Australia welcomes it. The same remark as to the celebrations, of course, applies here also. But a different order of things obtains in Japan, where the Gregorian calendar was adopted in 1872. The Flowery Kingdom gets its New Year at the same time as Australia. It is said that with the change in the calendar some of the picturesqueness vanished from the Japanese celebrations, but even yet they are quaint and interesting. At the close of the year, all buildings are elaborately decorated with evergreens and rice straw. Great branches of living pine and feathery bamboo, planted in large vases filled with earth, are placed on each side of the doorways; garlands of rice straw adorned with fir branches and tassels of grass are hung the walls under the projecting roofs, to prevent evil spirits from passing under and entering the house, and scarlet lobsters, seaweeds, ferns, rice cakes and mandarin oranges, each having an auspicious meaning for the New Year, are fastened about the door posts and lintels. In addition to these each doorway has its crossed flags—a red sun on a white ground—in honor of the emperor. For interior decoration the famous dwarf trees so skillfully produced by Japanese florists by allowing them a minimum of water, light and soil are in great demand, the favorites being the dwarf peach with its double pink blossoms and the much-prized plum.

The Japanese have compelled their Korean neighbors to adopt the same calendar, and here, as in all the yellow kingdoms, the New Year is held to be a very solemn festival. During the last three days of the year all work ceases except the necessary preparations for the coming holiday. Absentees return to their homes, the courts close, no arrests are made, and prisoners with slight offenses are allowed to go free for a time. On New Year's eve all doors are closed to keep out Angwangi, a sort of evil-minded Korean Santa Claus who makes the rounds.

THE CROWDS ARE MANIACAL

As Greenwich time travels westward, the next people to observe our New Year's day are the European settlers in the Malay peninsula and further India. Rather less than two hours after the happy day has begun at Perth, in West Australia, the European population of Calcutta signalize its arrival. Just 62 minutes more and it has reached Bombay. Two hours later the non-Russians of Moscow are exchanging congratulations, and half an hour afterwards their brethren at St. Petersburg are following their example. Another four minutes, and the New Year is greeted in the European quarter at Constantinople, and every succeeding minute brings under its sway more and more those nations who acknowledge it.

There are several curious things to relate about the line where this day, and all other days, begin and end. In a few hours a ship going east would cross it, and sail right out of the early morning of January 2 into the midnight of December 31, and thus greet the New Year a second time. By sailing in the contrary direction she could avoid meeting the New Year at all.

IN TABLE DAINTIES

CHICKEN WITH TOMATO PUREE IS EXCELLENT.

Even if Forced to Make the Best of Canned Goods, a Most Appetizing Meal Is Here Provided For.

Wild fowl and tame reign on our company tables. No winter seems just right without a wild duck, a prairie chicken, a partridge or quail, yet the prices have gone up so high in recent years that the middle class cannot afford to indulge in game at all.

As duck and chicken farms have increased in numbers, better poultry is obtainable from the point of texture of meats, quality and age. We may have young chickens any day of the year, and are sure of getting a young duck, a young turkey or a young goose if we ask for it. Young fowl simply roasted are the daintiest meats to be placed on the table.

Sometimes old fowl are a cent or two cheaper a pound, and are fit for stews or pies. A chicken with tomato puree is very good. In the absence of fresh tomatoes it is possible to buy tomatoes canned whole, the fruit so firm that it can be lifted from the tin without breaking—and be stuffed.

One chicken, half pound of tomatoes, one small carrot, one small onion, three cloves, one pint of stock, one blade of mace, small bunch of sweet herbs, seasoning of salt and pepper, two tablespoonfuls of flour, one tablespoonful of butter, some stuffed tomatoes.

Skin and joint the chickens neatly; slice the carrot and onion, put them at the bottom of a saucepan with the sweet herbs, mace and cloves. Lay in the chicken and pour in the boiling stock; cook slowly 30 minutes to an hour, according to the age of the bird. Meanwhile slice the tomatoes and fry them in the butter for 15 minutes, then stir in the flour, and strain the stock to the tomatoes; season, rub through a fine sieve, re-heat and pour over the chicken so as to coat it thoroughly. Garnish the dish with stuffed tomatoes.

Old Virginia Brunswick Stew.

Cut up two or three squirrels into joints and lay in cold water to draw out the blood. Put a gallon of water in a large pot, add a tablespoonful salt and boil five minutes. Add to the boiling water six potatoes parboiled and sliced, one pint butter beans, one quart of fresh tomatoes, one onion sliced and the equivalent of six ears of corn cut from the cob. Add the squirrel pieces, cover closely, and stew gently for two and a half hours, stirring frequently from the bottom. Then add a quart of fresh tomatoes, peeled and sliced, or a quart of the canned tomatoes, with two teaspoonfuls sugar, and cook an hour longer. Ten minutes before removing from the fire add a half cup butter cut in bits the size of a walnut, and rolled in flour. Give a final boil, season to taste with black pepper and serve.

To Prevent Rusting.

It is better to use wooden pegs in bath rooms or kitchens where damp towels or cloths are apt to be hung, otherwise the linen may rust from the iron.

If iron hooks are already in place and it is not convenient to change them, give them a coat of white enamel paint. It prevents danger of rusting and is much less unsightly against the paper.

If the linen has already been rusted it may be removed by rubbing with lemon juice and salt.

Hamburg Cheese.

Separate the whites and yolks of seven eggs. Beat the yolks with three-quarters of a pound of sugar until very light and thick. Add the grated rind of three lemons and stir over the fire in a large double boiler until thick, adding the strained juice of the lemons. When thick and smooth add the whites whipped to a stiff froth and cut and stir for three minutes longer. Take from the fire and heap in small glasses.

Plain Herb Dressing.

Crumb stale bread to the amount of two quarts and toss it into a bowl. Add two tablespoonfuls of salt, one teaspoon of pepper, two tablespoons powdered summer savory, two tablespoons finely minced parsley, one tablespoon of powdered sage. Do not use coarse herbs. Have some butter warm, but not melted to the point where it runs. Mix this lightly through the crumbs and fill the cavity of the turkey.

Thick Vegetable Soup.

Wash one-quarter cup pearl barley and let it come to a boil in water to cover. Pour off first water and add one quart clear water, and one quart sediment from clear soup. Simmer gently for two hours. Then add one cup each of diced turnip, carrot, onion, cabbage, potato and celery, if liked. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Boil gently till tender.

Iron Rust.

Sprinkle on the spot of iron rust some powdered alum and arrange the spot exactly over the spout of a boiling tea kettle. Wash the alum out of the cloth at once, else the alum would eat a hole in the fabric.

A New Chicken Dish.

If one wants to use left-over chicken for a delicious supper or luncheon dish the meat should be cut into cubes and then be covered with strips of red Spanish peppers, which now sell by the can.

JOHNNY WEEKES' LOVE AFFAIRS

The Triumph of a Tactless Woman

(Copyright, Ford Pub. Co.)

"I often think," sighed Mrs. Berkeley Dexter, "how perfectly good I could be if there were no other women in the world." She leaned back in her chair and gazed thoughtfully into space.

I had my doubts as to the efficacy of solitude, and I expressed them. "If I remember rightly," I added, "there was only one woman in the Garden of Eden, and even she, poor, dear lady—"

Mrs. Dexter interrupted with characteristic disregard for any one's feelings but her own. "Don't be silly," she said, pleasantly. "I was really thinking of Lady Passay. She's such a dreadfully interfering old thing."

"Old?" Her ladyship's coiffure ever defied inspection, and my curiosity had always been almost feminine. "I wonder. Her figure is youthful, and her cheek is childlike, still, one never knows. And, after all, youth is merely comparative."

"Do you know Johnny Weeks?" Mrs. Dexter demanded, suddenly.

"He was the friend of my childhood," Mrs. Dexter continued, dreamily retrospective, "at least, of my sister's childhood—it's the same thing."

"Hardly," I ventured to interpose.

Mrs. Dexter was uncompromising in her candor as to the sum of her friend's years. "He is 42," she declared, impassively; 'but I was the youngest of a very large family. Johnny was an affectionate soul, and made love to us all in turn, as we grew big enough; it was his way, and we expected it. But he was engaged to my sisters—to one of them—at least."

I sighed—I believe from envy. "To love one of you," I observed, "is a liberal education—to love the whole family—" I paused—lost in my pursuit of adequate expression.

Mrs. Dexter said: "Yes, of course," in an absent sort of way, and relapsed into unexpected silence.

"He is to be congratulated on his enterprise,"I went on. "Did he—did he—so to speak, pursue the same tactics with you all, or did he allow for difference of temperament, and vary his—er—mode of procedure? I merely ask, don't you know. For myself, I was only allowed—"

"Why Don't You Get Married Yourself?" She Asked.

Mrs. Dexter cut me short. "It has been a most distressing affair, but we've managed to save him."

"We?"

"To be absolutely correct, it was I who saved him, though, of course, Lady Passay lays claim to all the credit. All she did was to bully—I never bully."

"All things to all men," I said, vaguely, and trusted the remark might fit in somehow.

"No. I was only very kind to him, and spent a lot of time in showing him what a nice time people could have when they were good. I took him out to dinner—I took him to more than one ball—I sat out dances with him, and—" she paused to give the next announcement its full force, "I even let him hold my hand."

"Ah! And where was Berkeley?" I put the question as casually as I could, but it seemed that somebody ought to consider Berkeley, even if his wife had forgotten all about him.

"And then I made him tell me the whole thing," she went on. "Lady Passay had said she was an absolute impossible person—it appeared that Lady Passay had been interfering rather actively before she came and implored my aid, and the young woman had defied her, and I didn't know this before, or I think I should have let them fight it out—anyhow, I don't trust Lady Passay, and I haven't the least faith in her judgment. You know what people are when they get to her age?"

"Which is—?"

"So I determined to use my own discretion, and had the two—Johnny and his young woman—up to dinner. But, oh! my dear!"

Mrs. Dexter came to a sudden and horrified stop. I forgave the obscurity of her remark for the sake of the "my dear," and tried for a moment to pretend that the designation was rightfully bestowed. Fatuously I considered it, and believed myself to be in the seventh heaven. Mrs. Dexter's next words recalled me.

"—With neither looks, nor manners, nor style," she was saying—"perfectly shocking. After that I gave my whole mind to the business—there was no defying me—and in a week," she concluded, with a smile that would have been triumphant if it had not been so severly superior, "in a week the engagement was off—finished—done with."

"Aren't you ashamed of yourself?" I demanded, with some show of indignation.

"I told Lady Passay he wouldn't be amenable to bullying," was the only response, "but she hasn't any tact. The other way was far the best, and much more interesting."

I began to feel sorry for the disengaged girl, and said so. "Tact," I added, 'is a very good word, but it's apt to be misplaced. And why did Lady Passay interfere? Was Johnny a friend of her childhood as well?"

Mrs. Berkeley Dexter did not respond directly. "It's not as if he cared two pins for the girl," she argued, "nor she for him. She tricked him into the engagement, and thought it would be a good match. Absurd!"

"On your own showing,"I pursued, "the entire matter was most discreditable, not to say improper!"

Mrs. Dexter made a variant effort to retain her dignity. "I beg your pardon," she said, coldly, "on my part, at any rate, quite properly improper."

"And, of course, you told Berkeley all about it?"

She turned on me with a counter question. "Why don't you get married yourself?" she asked, "or, at least, engaged?"

"With people like you and Lady Passay about?" I ejaculated, "heaven forbid!"

"I should be very kind to you," smiled Mrs. Berkeley Dexter.

"The time for that," said I, "is past." As I spoke, my eye fell and rested on a bowl of roses that stood on an adjacent table. I leaned forward. "It used to be your favorite flower," I murmured, as I selected a fine Gloire de Dijon, and laid it beside her hand.

"How well you remember!" Mrs. Dexter gave the suspicion of a sigh.

"Remembrance isn't taxed," I told her, "except perhaps with regret, and sometimes, perhaps, with a little surprise. We are growing old gradually, but surely."

"And we ought to use our experience for the benefit of our friends, oughtn't we?" was Mrs. Dexter's sweet rejoinder. "Which was precisely what I thought when I heard that poor Johnny was so unhappily engaged. Lady Passay said he was most awfully miserable."

"He doesn't show up very well," I commented. "Why on earth couldn't he manage his own affairs and not allow a couple of women to interfere. You might ask him."

"I don't think I shall," said Mrs. Dexter.

"You're afraid."

"I'm not. Only, you see, he doesn't think I did interfere; he thinks he did it all himself."

"He ought to go back into pinafores and leading strings—a man? Pooh!"

"Great men are not always wise," retorted Mrs. Dexter. "He would have been more difficult in pinafores. Don't you know your sex yet?"

I rose to take my leave.

"It's very sordid," I remarked, as I held out my hand, "but, after all, the lady is to be congratulated—on her escape. She would have been wretched."

"You don't really think so?"

"I'm convinced of it. And what are you going to do now?"

"I'm not quite sure," hesitated Mrs. Dexter, "there are just the usual things going on, and I'm really rather popular as a hostess, with always a spare place for an old friend. Why not consider an early week-end? Berkeley would be delighted."

"And Johnny?"

"Oh, Johnny." Mrs. Dexter's tone consigned Johnny to everlasting oblivion. "Didn't I tell you just now how perfectly good I could be if there were no other women in the world? Well I could. But when you have a lot of worry, and go out of your way to be kind to a childhood's friend, and then wake up one day to find you've merely been made a cat's-paw of, it's hard—very hard. I've had a letter from Johnny to say that next week he's going to marry Lady Passay, and they've had the audacity to invite me to the wedding. Me! And they'll be awfully disappointed if I don't go, they say. I always said that woman hadn't any tact!"

The opportunity was irrisistible. "Out of the fullness of the heart the mouth speaketh," I murmured. "Did you want him yourself?"

Woman Suffrage Increasing.

In proportion to the population, the little kingdom of Belgium probably can claim the greatest number of organizations advocating woman suffrage. At the last count they numbered 123.

Two Costumes

THE costume at the left is violet satin finished cloth. The blouse is trimmed in an odd way with bands of the material, buttons and straps of cord. The plastron and sash are of black liberty, the latter knotted low in front with fringed ends.

The wrist ruffles and those on the blouse are of lace, as is also the little guimpe. The plain skirt is simply finished at the bottom with rows of stitching.

Green velvet is used for the other costume. The blouse, with lapped tailor seams, crossed slightly in front where it is ornamented with passementerie buttons. The wide revers are also ornamented with these buttons and with motifs of passementerie. The crossed waistcoat is of tan-colored satin, trimmed with cord and embroidered dots. The chemisette is of dotted tulle, the girdle is of green liberty. The long sleeves and the skirt are trimmed to correspond with the blouse.

PARTY DRESS OF VELVETEEN.

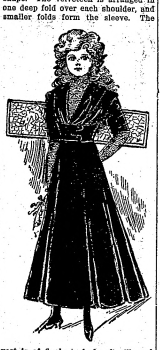
Rich Costume Designed for Girl of from Fourteen to Sixteen Years.

There are so many beautiful shades in velveteen that it is difficult to know which to select; the skirt of this is quite plain; it is a circular shape. The velveteen is arranged in one deep fold over each shoulder, and smaller folds form the sleeve. The vest is of finely tucked soft silk and insertion, and the under-sleeves are the same; the waist-band is shaped and cut in scallops in the front, buttoning over.



Materials required: 10 yards velveteen, 6 yards insertion, 1 yard silk, 36 inches wide.

The Smart Scarfs.

Just at the present moment the silks being used for the manufacture of the smartest scarfs have patterns which would seem to owe their inspiration to various phases of nature. Fruits and flowers figure very largely in the designs now as do all sorts of flowering plants and vines. The newest scarfs of this type show another phase of nature in their design. They have round balls of color suggesting suns crossed by fleecy clouds. As the majority of these scarfs are made of gray brocade, the cloud effect is perfectly apparent. One had red "suns," while dark blues and browns also appear in some of the patterns.

The Little Bertha.

All sorts of berthas are used for trimming the draped bodies of crepe, voile and chiffon cloth gowns. Sometimes these berthas are of broadcloth in a matching tone and embroidered in self-colored silks. Again they are of coarse net soutached, embroidered or appliqued in self or contrasting colors; but in nearly every instance they are shaped like the erstwhile popular jumper—the shoulder straps terminating just below the bust line and at the top extending out over the sleeve. To accompany these berthas there are bandings to finish the sleeve and narrow edges to finish the collar.

ROSES ON ALL WINTER HATS.

Of Every Color and Hue, and the Larger the Better.

Roses of every color and hue, big as cabbages, are smart on winter hats. It is the color that takes. Of course a luxuriant big rose, though of satin and silk and in the shades of pink never to be seen on a real flower, helps to enliven the feelings. A rose hat makes one feel positively young, and young faces more than ever like flowers themselves.

The ribbon roses which adorn a dressy hat just from Paris are made of many shades of pink satin ribbon in one instance, and in another of curious shades of dead white and greeny white to look like a bride rose.

It may seem folly to pay four dollars for a single artificial rose, yet that is what fashion is doing, and the ribbon roses cost as much if not more.

"The keynote of the year is simple elegance," said the milliner as she carefully extricated a large hat to fit on my head for the reception. Simple elegance."

Truly it looked so. It was a turban, rather large, and over the maline finished frame was folded a point lace scarf with little ermine and sable tails rounding the crown. A narrow twist of vieux bleu supple ribbon gave the color note—that was all. Other turbans—the coming hats—were as superb in scarfs of ottoman silk in rich colors.

Cretonne Bed Spreads.

The renewal of things Colonial has brought about the fashion for bed spreads of old world chintz. These substitute the spreads of Marseilles. They hang nearly to the floor, are slashed to fit the two lower posts, and are edged with three-inch linen lace. There is an oblong piece made to match for the pillows. It is always better to use what is known as day pillows under this. They are stuffed with a hard substance and made to stand firm and full.

Fancy Muffs.

Fancy muffs will be a fad of the season, and in them there is a chance for employing all the cleverness in design and needlework that a woman possesses. In a muff brocade and feathers may be most charmingly combined, and a neckpiece to match may be evolved. Black velvet with black ostrich tips can be worked together with astonishingly artistic results, while artificial flowers, either as a substitute or in combination, are lovely.

The Turnover Back.

The very stiff linen collar has fallen into disrepute except for business wear. Softer neck effects are considered desirable, and the sheer, embroidered turnovers are being worn again in combination with fluffy jabots, rabat ties and tasseled silk or velvet cravats. Worn thus, the turnover, of course, fastens in front like a linen collar, and the edges are held neatly together by a fancy brooch.

Silk Skirt; Cloth Coat.

Among the best of the new costumes is seen the combination of Ottoman silk and liberty broadcloth. The skirt is of silk, long, flowing, and untrimmed. The coat is also long, is of the cloth, and usually has revers of silk.

ROAD AND FARM IMPROVEMENT

ALFALFA EXPERIENCE.

Judge Humphrey Tells of His Success with Crop.

Among the successful growers of alfalfa in Illinois is Judge J. Otis Humphrey of Sangamon county. Speaking of his experience with the crop at the Tazewell county farmers' institute recently, he said:

"I tried for three years to grow alfalfa and it died out every time, but I don't say that a crop can't be grown simply because I failed in producing it. The scientist is among us, and he is the only man who actually knows, and he has finally taught us how to make alfalfa grow.

"Then I agreed to follow the exact advice of Dr. Cyril G. Hopkins of the Illinois agricultural experiment station, got soil from an old alfalfa field (soil from a sweet clover patch will do the same) to inoculate the ground with bacteria. The land was rich as cream and thoroughly tiled. I put on bone meal, lime and manure and plowed it under.

"After working the ground into the best order I ever saw a field, I had it worked just as much more. It was harrowed until there was not a clod in it. And I have not had a particle of trouble since in growing alfalfa.

"You may sow alfalfa any time from May to August, and if you will do it right and follow the right you can grow alfalfa anywhere in the corn belt, and the crop is worth $50 an acre. I sow one bushel to five acres; that is 12 pounds to the acre.

I have never had a complete stand at first. If I had ten per cent. of alfalfa on the ground, I would go on and make a stand of it. I disk all the bare places in the field and wherever the stand does not satisfy me, setting disks almost straight. I never killed my alfalfa by disking it. I disk, resow and harrow these bare places. I have done this the first week in June, the middle of July, the last week in August and the first of October, and always with good results.

I now have five fields of alfalfa, and for the last six years I have cut about four tons per acre of this marvelous crop.

In my judgment, alfalfa is the most marvelous food and forage plant, containing the most of the elements that sustain life of any in existence.

Corn, wheat and oats have no power to get nitrogen from the air, but alfalfa is the greatest nitrogen-fixing plant on earth. It secures from the air four times as much nitrogen as red clover. But it will also make you money while it is storing nitrogen for you. I believe that alfalfa, one year with another, is a better money-maker even than corn.

All animals on the farm from chickens up will eat alfalfa; the pigs thrive on it; sows will go through winter on it; it is good for the mares; weanling colts fed alfalfa and shelled oats come out fat in the spring and shed off in March. It supplies more green feed for the hogs than anything else, and this is a great prevention of hog disease. I have tried it, and I think I know about it. I would not give a ton of alfalfa for two of timothy. You cannot feed a horse anything in the world he likes so well as alfalfa. Put corn, shelled oats, a bran mash and alfalfa in his manger, and you will see that he eats the alfalfa first. I don't know any animal that will not leave every other food to get alfalfa.

GATE HINGE AND BRACE.

It Can Be Made from an Old Wagon Tire.

The combined gate hinge and brace shown in the accompanying illustration has been used to an advantage on our farm, being both simple and durable. The combined hinge and brace is made from an old wagon tire, the ends being worked into hinges after the proper bend has been given to the tire. Holes are bored at suitable distances. It will be found, says Prairie Farmer, that the fact that the hinge and connecting brace are all one piece of iron will aid materially in preventing the gate from sagging. Such a combination is perhaps a little more expensive than the ordinary hinge, but it will be found that the extra cost will often be returned in added durability.

FARM NOTES.

Sow clover with oats. It will do wonders for the corn crop the following year. Clover straw should be scattered back over the fields after threshing. Oftentimes there is success in seeding alfalfa with barley.

The happy, successful farmer has many friends with odd names. Have you ever noticed it? He has Experience, Contentment, Patience, Mercy, Faith, Hope, Charity and Love. You will find yourself happy and successful, too, when all these can be found under your roof.

A mule once drew a heavy load up a steep hill; when he had almost reached the top he kicked himself loose and the load rolled down the hill. That mule had to go back and draw the same load to the top of the same hill again. There are lots of mules in the world. Ponder, and be wise.

HOME-MADE FARM SLED.

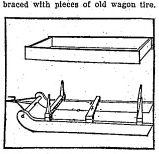
Will Prove Handy During the Winter Months.

The runners for the sled shown in the accompanying illustration should be made from pieces of any good tough light wood three inches thick, eight inches wide and ten feet long. A strip four inches wide should be ripped from the upper side to within one foot of the front end with which to make bolsters which are thus 3x4 and cut four feet in length. These bolsters are raised from the runners by placing two-inch blocks under them and the front and back ones are braced with pieces of old wagon tire.



A Hand-Made Farm Sled.

The bolsters are bolted to the runners with 14-inch one-eighth-inch bolts. The roller should be fitted into two-inch holes in the front ends of the runners, to which the tongue is mortised in the center and bolted, explains Prairie Farmer, while the braces are also bolted so the sled can be taken apart and stored during the summer months.

The standards, 8x4x2 are made to fit 1½-inch holes in the bolsters. Boards 6x1-10 feet long are nailed to the tops of the bolsters inside the standards and a floor is made the proper size to fit between, while side boards 14 inches wide and ten feet long are set up inside the standards and held in position by end gates of the same width and long enough to fit in tight.

ROAD-BOUND IN WINTER.

Season When Much Work on Highways Should Be Done.

The farmer has plenty of leisure from December to March, but for the remainder of the year he is exceedingly busy, having little time for recreation and pleasure. If he and his family are to have social life, the winter is their opportunity. The social circle in every town and village should include the farm, and the dwellers on the farm should meet with the town folk in social gatherings. Both will profit by this mingling; they will become better acquainted, will better understand each other, and prejudice will give way to friendship.

What is there to hinder? Roads, only roads. These are nearly always bad in winter and often practically impassable. There is no pleasure in driving over a heavy, muddy road, and still worse is a rough, frozen one. The fact is, the winter is the time when good roads are most needed. They would enable the farmer to go to town and get out of his shell, keeping in touch with the world. They would enable the youth upon the farm to have the social privileges, the enjoyment and the wholesome recreation their natures demand, and are theirs by right, but which are denied them by bad roads. Such conditions have driven thousands, yes, tens of thousands of the youth from the farm to the cities, draining the farms of their best blood. Good roads mean higher citizenship, better morals, better education, more pleasure and less drudgery. Nothing pays so well as good roads, and the best is none too good.

Under the state aid plan of road building, whereby towns, cities, railways and other corporations contribute to lighten the farmers' burden—stone or gravel roads can be built upon the main highways throughout Illinois at an annual cost of ten to fifteen cents per acre.

ROAD DRAGGING.

Weeds Along the Roadside Must First Be Cut or Burned.

This has not been what Truthful James would call a whopper of a year for vegetable growths, but the growth of weeds and grass along the grades of the public highways has not been over-muchly stunted. There are sunflowers, horseweeds and a few other choice varieties to be found on most grades that do credit to the soil that produced them.

Any grade that is going to be dragged this winter must have these weeds and the grass mowed and burned, or the road drag might as well be left off the road. It takes a very little time to mow, rake and burn the trash on a half-mile grade and the time it will take to keep it in fine shape this winter, with a road drag would not be missed. The main thing about winter road dragging is to get the work done just before a freeze, then the smoothness may last for weeks at a time, or as long as the ground remains frozen. If not dragged the roughness would last as long as frozen, or until hard travel smoothed it off the hard way.

Treatment of Corn Ground.

The ground for corn should be plowed in the fall, for it is easier to work in the spring. In the spring work it up with a disk. A disk plow pulls easier than the moldboard plow. The corn should not be planted until the ground is warmed up. It should not be planted too deeply. The corn crop should be cultivated three times.

NEVER AGAIN

By Willard H. Garrison.

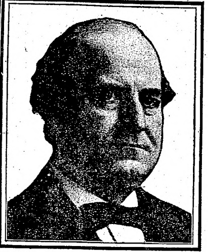
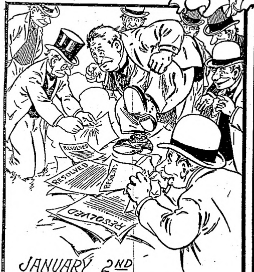
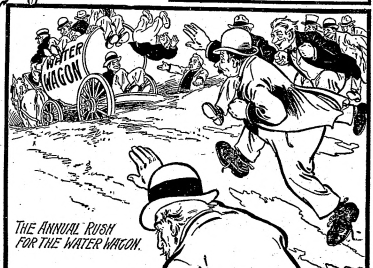
W. H. TAFT. "ON TOP JUST AT PRESENT"





JANUARY 2ND



THE ANNUAL RUSH FOR THE WATER WAGON.

WITHIN a few days our ears will be filled with the deafening crash of people breaking their New Year's resolutions. Three million sets of iron-clad non-combustible American "never-agains" crushed to earth will remain there until dug up again the night of December 31, 1909.

What has the New Year in store for you, joy or sorrow? Few to-day realize what or where they will be before the end of 1909, and attempts to prognosticate probably would be vain. As far as destiny is concerned the world literally lives "from hand to mouth." We can only guess at what the next year will bring.

For William Jennings Bryan 1909 means more lectures at so much per night. For William Howard Taft, 1909 is a year of glad rejoicing, for on March 4 he assumes the presidential chair vacated by Theodore Roosevelt. Four years ago when an attempt was made to relegate Mr. Taft to the bench of the supreme court of the United States he little suspected that he was material to fill the chair at the head of the nation.

Joy is mingled with sadness in President Roosevelt's case and his cup is one of bitter-sweet, for while he lifts the cares of the presidential office from his head and applies his strenuosity tests upon the habitues of the East African jungle he has shot his bolt as far as the U. S. A. is concerned, there being nothing left to conquer.

But for the commonplace citizen of these United States 1909 carries only conjecture, as a rule. Lots of men and women start the year planning to carry out some cherished ideas, whether they will succeed being a matter that only Father Time himself can solve.

There are approximately 83,000,000 souls in this country. Of that number statistics say 3,000,000 have drawn up sets of resolutions, which if carried out would cut a swath in the nation's liquor and tobacco traffic.

From every state in the union the cry "never again" arises, and just a few days after the debut of the new year the phrase gives way to a murmur of "just one more" with the eventual result that 15 days or three weeks finds conditions once more at a normal state.

There is a saying that a man is never great until he dies. Therefore it is generally not until the demise of the righteous that we learn of the man or woman who made and kept a New Year's resolution. Then the press lets us know about it and as a rule the alleged New Year's resolution which was kept may be laid at the door of the bright young reporter who covered the death and who was anxious to inoculate a feature into his story.

There are thousands of ways of applying the "never again." Here are a few of the more or less popular ways;

I promise never again, after January 1 to—

Drink Intoxicants,
Smoke Tobacco,
Swear,
Be Mean to My Wife,
Keep Late Hours,
Waste Money,
Eat Heavy Meals,
Vote the —— Ticket,
Grow a Mustache,
Spurn the Alarm Clock's Call,
Read Novels,
Quit My Job,
Believe Fish Tales,
Play Cards,
Gamble,
Celebrate July 4,
Dance Overtime,
Ask for More Pay,
Tell Lies,
Wear Loud Socks,
Flirt,
Part My Hair in the Middle,
Shirk Work,
Watch Salome Dances,
Marry,
Be Conceited,
Wear Merry Widow Hats.
Etc.

Other purely local faults are subjects of New Year's resolutions and usually the signed and sworn document is tucked away in a corner, neglected and its contents forgotten. Then the party to the "swearing off," who for three days has been telling his friends or her friends how invigorating it feels to be once more spiritually pure, drops down a step or two and when resolutions are mentioned has a merry laugh and tells about how last New Year's he or she had sworn off this and that and had had more fun "with the folks over it."

At midnight each December 31, Father Time loads up the water wagon with thousands of ex-imbibers who now are firm believers in the health-giving properties of aqua pura. About 12:01 a. m. January 1, the one who is less able to stand the gaff of total abstinence slides off to the ground and proceeds to celebrate. For fear that he may be lonesome two or three others follow him and pretty soon most of them are sliding back to Mother Earth and alleged happiness. Occasionally a man or two is found who keeps a resolution or two and then there is a place reserved for him in the hall of fame, but there are lots of empty niches there.

New Year's parties, attended by young people, are the breeding places for resolutions. Inventors of games who profit thereby, have gone so far as to concoct resolution games for parties of that sort and in some of the contests the loser is compelled to keep his promise to "swear off" this or that, if he would adhere to his or her affidavit.

A story is told of a young lady and a young man, engaged to each other, who attended a New Year's party. The couple were extremely fond of each other and the bride-to-be had only one objection to her intended spouse, viz., that he drank intoxicants. He was not aware that she knew it. Consequently before the little social function she "fixed" the resolution contest, so he would lose. She playfully told him that he must keep his resolution and he, rather fearfully promised, little suspecting the plot.

Well, he lost and said he would keep the promise, though he lied and said he never touched a "drop in his life."

"I know you don't drink," she breathed into his ear from the depths of a cozy corner, "but I want to be sure that you never will."

Thus the young man's habit met its Waterloo in the New Year's trick of a "stacked deck," promoted by his fiancee, and now, five years following their marriage, his taste for spirits was declared positively extinct by the wife in a recent coroner's inquest at the ladies' sewing circle.

That was one resolution which held and probably will for the rest of the young married man's life, providing he doesn't get into politics. But that was one of a few. When a man or woman makes a resolution with a string attached to it such as awarding a watching friend a few simoleons in case the promise to abstain from some habit is broken, then the vaccination "takes," but otherwise, it seldom holds good for more than a week. A week is really a long stretch for the life of a set of promises, most of them expiring with dawn of January 1, although having been made only the previous night. This new year will see the breaking of approximately 3,000,000 well-founded resolutions, but who cares? There are lots more New Years coming, say the philosophers.

Schools for Missionaries.

The immense Northfield schools and colleges for the training of missionaries and preachers were erected out of the profits derived from the sale of Moody and Sankey's "Sacred Songs and Solos." Miss Ada Ellen Bayly ("Edna Lyall") built St. Peter's church, Eastbourne, England, with part of the money she received from "Donovan" and "We Two." She also presented a fine peal of bells to the neighboring church of St. Saviour and christened them after the heroes of her books—Erle, Hugo and Donovan.

Prof. Brander Matthews, the brilliant writer and teacher, was discussing literary quaintness at Columbia. In illustration of the quaint he said:

"A little girl I know was very bad one day. She was so bad that, other corrections failing, her mother took her up to her room to whip her.

"During this proceeding, the little girl's older brother opened the door and was about to enter. But in her prone position across her mother's knee the litle girl twisted 'round her head and said severely:

"'Eddie, go out! Can't you see we are busy?'"

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

The government of Canada now gives to every actual settler 160 acres of wheat-growing land free and an additional 160 acres at $3.00 an acre. The 300,000 contented American settlers making their homes in Western Canada is the best evidence of the superiority of that country. They are becoming rich, growing from 25 to 50 bushels wheat to the acre; 60 to 110 bushels oats and 45 to 60 bushels barley, besides having splendid herds of cattle raised on the prairie grass. Dairying is an important industry.

The crop of 1908 still keeps Western Canada in the lead. The world will soon look to it as its food-producer.

Entered at the Post-office in Plummer, Minn. as Second Class Mail Matter.

The old year is drawing to a close. It has been a good year to us and we wish to extend our sincere thanks to our host of friends for the support they have given us and extend to them our best wishes for a happy and prosperous New Year.

Santa Claus a myth? No. Santa is a living, breathing reality. We saw him, and we know. And he was everywhere, all over the world, at Christmas time, a beautiful white-winged spirit that seemed to steal away the envy, hatred and malice from human hearts and place therein the gentle glow of beneficence and beauty, if only for a time. It is a wonderful transformation and all the children know it is there. Santa is a reality, and will be so long as the spirits of tenderness, kindness and love can find a resting place in human hearts.

The time for good resolutions is at hand. Are you going to try and do better for yourself and your fellow men during 1909 than you did in 1908? Look over the happenings of the old year carefully and you will find that in many ways you can improve conditions for yourself and your neighbors. If some one suggests some public improvement don't try to defeat it just because you are not the originator of it. If your neighbor is doing well, don't try to spoil his business when you gain nothing by doing so. Every time you get a chance speak a good word for the community you live in; if you can't do that, move out and make room for some one who will. It pays to be truthful, neighborly and progressive.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Clearwater Farmer's Telephone Co. will be held in Plummer on the afternoon of January 5th. At this meeting officers will be elected for the ensuing year and other business transacted.

Marlin

For shooting the swift flying, heavily feathered ducks and geese the Marlin 12-gauge repeating shotgun has no superior. This gun is exceedingly strong in construction and yet is not heavy. It is bored to throw an excellent pattern with great penetration. The solid top keeps out the weather and the brush and twigs of the blind, and the side ejector prevents the empty shells from being a nuisance to the shooter. It's the best bad weather gun.

The Marlin 12-gauge is suited to all forms of bird and trap shooting, and for durability, strength and ease of action is unexcelled. Made for both black and smokeless powders and for heavy loads. Two separate extractors make sure work.

Burning With Curiosity.

A certain famous authoress who is much worried by unknown correspondents has taken her revenge in a somewhat eccentric fashion. She received a letter from a woman informing her that the writer had named her last baby after her and requesting the authoress' views on her choice. She received a thick envelope, heavily sealed, with this inscription: "Not to be opened till baby's thirtieth birthday." Now the mother is worrying herself day and night as to the contents of the envelope.

A Blaze At Lambert.

Word was received here Monday morning that the Paquin saloon in Lambert had burned to the ground Sunday morning between 10 and 11 o'clock.

Mr. Paquin had been in the building at about 10 o'clock that day to fix the fire in the stove before going to church and then having closed the drafts. It was an airtight stove and the supposition is that it exploded. The village has no fire protection.

Mr. Paquin carried no insurance, consequently he suffered a total loss.

Waking a Deaf Person.

"To waken a deaf person who wishes to be called at a certain hour is about the hardest proposition a hotel clerk runs up against," said a member of that genial fraternity. "To ring the telephone is useless because the man couldn't hear if you rang until doomsday. Knocking, for the same reason, is equally futile. Now and then a guest who has lost his hearing suggests that we leave his door open all night so we can walk right in and shake him, but even though he does appear to be a dead game sport there are so many chances of somebody else less guileless than ourselves walking in ahead of us that we cannot consent to that. So far the only satisfactory way found for waking a deaf lodger is to tie a string to his wrist, pass the string through the keyhole and then tug away at it at the appointed time. That method, however, is rather primitive. It seems to me that the man who can patent a harmless artistic device for waking the deaf is sure of fame and fortune, not to mention the gratitude of hotel clerks."—New York Sun.

The Mullahs of India.

A mullah, or, as it is more properly written, mollah, is a title given in India and throughout the east generally to a religious leader of any description. Thus the sultan of Turkey is a mollah, because he is the supreme head of the moslem world. And there are hundreds of others. To most of the more conspicuous among them we prefix the adjective "mad." This, however, must not be taken to mean that they are insane, the word being used rather in its oriental significance of "inspired." The person of the mollah is sacred. Not even the mighty Habibullah himself would care to lay a sacrilegious finger on one of these saintly personages. If he were to venture such an unheard of thing, vengeance would surely overtake him. For it is the cardinal principle of the Ulima—as the mollahs are collectively termed—that an injury purposely caused to one of their number can only be atoned for by the death of the individual inflicting it.

His Modest Request.

A man once asked Thackeray to lend him 5 shillings, which he would convert into £20,000. Asked how, he explained that he knew a young woman with £20,000 who he knew would marry him if he asked her, but he had pawned his teeth and wanted 5 shillings to redeem them in order to propose effectively.

NEWS OF A WEEK IN ITEMIZED FORM

Epitome of the Most Important Events Gathered From All Points of the Globe.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

President Roosevelt's younger daughter, Ethel, made her debut in society at a brilliant ball in the White House.

To familiarize themselves with conditions under the present form of government of the Panama canal zone and to consider what changes, if any, are desirable, 12 members of the house committee on foreign and interstate commerce left Charleston for Colon.

Carrying out its efforts to reduce the number of fatalities in coal mines, the United States geological survey is about to establish rescue stations in the principal coal fields of the country.

Announcement was made at the White House of a proposed plan for a conference looking toward the conservation of the natural resources of North America, to be held at the White House February 18 next. Letters suggesting the plan have been addressed by President Roosevelt to the governor-general and to the premiuer of Canada and to President Diaz of Mexico.

President Roosevelt received so many telegrams urging him to prevent the imprisonment of Gompers, Mitchell and Morrison, sentenced for contempt, that he asked Attorney General Bonaparte to go over the record with him.

Twelve months in jail for Samuel Gompers, president; nine months for John Mitchell, one of the vice-presidents, and six months for Frank Morrison, secretary, all of the American Federation of Labor, was the sentence imposed by Justice Wright of the supreme court of the District of Columbia for contempt of court in violating an order previously issued enjoining them from placing on the "Unfair" or "We don't patronize" list the Bucks Stove & Range Company of St. Louis, Mo. The defendants were released on bail pending appeal.

PERSONAL.

Heir to half a million dollars and entitled to a position in Baltimore society, William Jefferson Powell has been sentenced to serve 180 days in the workhouse in Los Angeles, Cal., on a vagrancy charge.

Lloyd C. Griscom, ambassador to Italy, has resigned from the diplomatic service.

Henry W. Poor, trading as H. W. Poor & Co., at 33 Wall street, made an assignment for the benefit of creditors, his liabilities probably being between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000.

Jack Johnson (colored) won the heavyweight championship of the world from Tommy Burns at Sydney, Australia. The fight went 14 rounds and Johnson was declared the winner on points. The police stopped the bout.

Cipriano Castro issued a statement in Berlin virtually surrendering the presidency of Venezuela.

Thomas F. Ryan, admittedly one of the greatest powers in the financial world, announced that, yielding to the advice of his physicians, he had resigned from the directorate of 31 corporations.

GENERAL NEWS.

An earthquake shattered the entire southwestern extremity of Italy and Sicily, and it is believed thousands of lives were lost. The part of the country devastated includes the provinces of Reggio di Calabria, Cosenza and Catanzaro, comprising the department of Calabria. # 75,000 PERISH IN QUAKE

Italian Disaster Assumes Awful Proportions=== Panic Reigns

FIRE ADDS TO HORROR

Scores of Towns Burned and Hundreds Are Buried Alive in Ruins of Their Homes

ROOSEVELT'S MESSAGE.

"His Majesty Vittorio Emmanuel, Rome:

"With all my countrymen I am appalled by the dreadful calamity which has befallen your country. I offer my sincerest sympathy. American National Red Cross has issued appeals for contributions for the sufferers and notified me that they will immediately communicate with the Italian Red Cross.

"Theodore Roosevelt."

TO-DAY'S NEWS OF QUAKE

- Latest estimate of dead, 80,000.
- Latest death estimate in Messina, 50,000.
- Mount Etna in eruption, adding to terror.
- Whole southern Italy and Sicily panic stricken.
- Fire in many towns killed hundreds.
- Message of sympathy from President Roosevelt.
- President Fallieres of France sent message of sympathy.
- King and queen of Italy at work in stricken district ministering aid.
- United States Red Cross sent aid and will raise fund.
- Pope started fund for sufferers.
- Catholic headquarters and officials in stricken district wiped out.
- Scores of persons, buried under the ruins, are said to be alive, with no hope of rescuing them.
- Vandals found looting and robbing the dead are being shot down by troops. Soldiers patrol the stricken towns, and what is practically martial law prevails.

Rome, Dec. 30.—South Italy and the island of Sicily have been visited by an appalling calamity, the extent of which cannot yet be grasped.

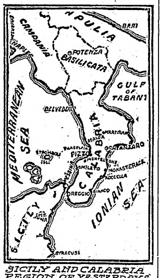
Latest reports to-day compiled by government authorities place the dead between 75,000 and 80,000.

The earthquake wrecked city after city, and obliterated smaller towns and villages without number. Then a tidal wave swept along the Strait of Messina and added to the horror, drowning the people in their helplessness and panic. Fire came to complete the work of destruction. Flames broke out in the devastated cities, and countless numbers of wounded men, women and children were burned to death.

Any adequate estimate of the total casualties is as yet quite impossible, but the Rome Tribuna places the number at between 60,000 and 70,000.

The horror and destructiveness of this visitation probably will exceed that of any earthquake in Italy since 1873, when 40,000 persons perished at Messina alone.

Reports of heavy loss of life are coming in every hour from city and town, and nearly every village in the stricken zone, and the story in its detail has only begun to be told. The horror grows as further reports come in.



SICILY AND CALABRIA REGION OF YESTERDAYS EARTHQUAKE

Messina has been fire-swept. The dead there alone will run into the tens of thousands. Reggio is a sepulchre of the dead. Catania suffered heavily.

Whole Country in Terror.

Mount Etna, the volcano on the island of Sicily, is active. The detonations are reverberating over Catania and add to the terror. Volumes of smoke are pouring from the crater.

The work of rescue is being pushed forward with every possible energy. Troops are being poured into the zone, but the efforts at succor are as yet utterly inadequate. France, Great Britain and Russia are hurrying warships to the scene.

King Victor Emmanuel and Queen Helena have left Rome for the south. His majesty will superintend in person the work of relief. The queen, refusing to let her husband go alone, insisted upon sharing his dangers.

The pope has made an appeal to Roman Catholics the world over for help. He has headed the relief subscription list with a donation of $200,000.

There is consternation in Rome. The telegraph and newspaper offices are besieged by weeping crowds, demanding news. Every fresh telegram tells the same story of death, destruction and desolation.

Few Escape Fearful Quake.

A special dispatch received from Catanzaro says that only a few thousands out of the entire population of Reggio have escaped death or injury. Lieut.-Gen. Fiera di Cossatto has ordered that all looters and robbers be shot on sight. Martial law was instituted in the earthquake zone. The population of Reggio is placed at about 50,000 persons by the best authorities. The city is eight miles south of Messina. The dead at Messina, as a result of the earthquake and tidal wave of Monday are estimated at 12,000. Scores still are alive beneath the ruins of the city. Owing to the inadequacy of the means of rescue at hand it will be impossible to reach these people and bring them out alive. Other dispatches received here place the dead at Messina at even more appalling figures. The Tribuna publishes a telegram saying the casualties will reach a total of 75,000 persons.

Mount Etna in Eruption.

From Catania, Sicily, comes word that Mount Etna Tuesday showed considerable activity, and the detonations, which were plainly heard in this city, together with the volume of smoke rolling out of the crater, added to the panic of the people.

According to the director of the Catania observatory, this activity is directly connected with the earthquakes which wrought such havoc in Calabria and Sicily, but a great eruption is not expected. Such phenomena seldom accompany violent seismic disturbances.

The pope has been notified that the entire religious communities of Messina and Reggio, including bishops, priests, monks and nuns, have been wiped out by the earthquake and fire.

Premier Giolitti received a telegram from Deputy Felice at Messina confirming previous reports of the complete destruction of Messina by fire following the earthquake. The deputy says that the dead at Messina will be counted by the tens of thousands.

50,000 Dead at Messina.

The minister of marine Tuesday received a wireless dispatch estimating the dead at Messina at 50,000. Reports have been received from two other towns in Calabria, Cassano and Cosenza. Cassano is said to have suffered 1,000 dead, while the wounded number 500. At Cosenza 500 dead people already have been taken from the ruins. Cassano has 6,700 people, while Cosenza is the center of a community with a population of 21,000.

The town of Palmi, Calabria, has been practically destroyed, as has also Bagnara. The dead at Palmi number 1,000, and it is impossible to estimate the number of the injured. Large numbers were killed also at Bagnara, and the list of wounded there also will be heavy. The tidal wave inundated a villa at San Giovanni, 2,500 feet back from the shore line.

Palmi has 10,000 inhabitants, while Bagnara counts 7,500 people.

King and Queen to Rescue.

Queen Helene has refused to allow her husband, the king, to go alone to the scene of the disaster. She said she would not give up her privilege of sharing her husband's dangers, and consequently both king and queen left Rome Tuesday afternoon for the south. The royal couple arrived earlier in the day from Naples. The queen explained to a member of her entourage that she considered it her duty to do all in her power to comfort and help her afflicted subjects. The king and queen left the railroad station here at half-past one. A number of ministers, senators and deputies, together with the mayor of Rome, were at the station to bid them farewell.

TWELVE DEAD, MORE TRAPPED

AN EXPLOSION IN WEST VIRGINIA COLLIERY CAUSES THE DISASTER.

Eighteen Men Are Taken Out Alive. Explosion Occurred in the Mine Owned By the Pocahontas Coal Company.

Bluefield, W. Va., Dec. 30.—Twelve men are known to be dead and probably twenty-five more were buried as the result of an explosion which occurred in the Lick Branch colliery owned by the Pocahontas Consolidated Coal company yesterday afternoon about 3 o'clock. It is not known exactly how many men were in the mine at the time.

The men leave the mine after what is known as the "run" and many of the fifty-two at work yesterday were not in the mine when the explosion occurred.

The dead:

Henry Lockhart, colored.
Richard Lockhart.
James Lockhart.
John Brown.
John Miller.
Kemp Sanders.
James Smith.
Charles Little.
W. Little.
Clark Kennedy.
Peter Kennedy.
Russian, name unknown.

At 11 o'clock tonight eighteen of entombed men had been taken out of the colliery alive. They had been stifled by the smoke and were not injured seriously enough to make their removal to a hospital necessary.

State mine inspectors have taken charge of the work of exploring the mine.

The management of this property, it is claimed, has provided every device known to mining experience and science to insure safety and it is thought that the trouble originated in an abandoned but connected working in the western division of the mine.

ROBBERY.

Thief Breaks Window and Steals Valuable Diamonds.

Minneapolis, Dec. 30.—Diamond bracelets to the value of $1,200 were stolen from a display window of the Paegel Jewelry Manufacturing company, 22 Third street south, between 6:30 and 6:45 o'clock yesterday morning.

A brick was hurled through the heavy plate glass and two trays containing about 50 bracelets, many of them set with diamonds, made away with.

The robbery was committed at the time the night and day police squads change beats, and during the ten minutes that the downtown section of the city is practically unprotected.

MT. AETNA

Is Grumbling and Again Threatens Eruption.

Catania, Sicily, Dec. 30.—Mount Aetna is showing considerable activity and the detonations, which can be plainly heard in this city, together with the volume of smoke rolling out of the crater, have added to the panic of the people.

According to the director of the local observatory, this activity is directly connected with the earthquakes of yesterday which wrought such havoc in Calabria and Sicily, but a great eruption is not expected. Such phenomena seldom accompany violent seismic disturbances.

May Send U. S. Troops.

Washington, Dec. 30.—Alarming conditons which have called out state troops and United States marshals at the mining town of Stearns, Whitley county, Kentucky, is creating some discussion at the war department over the probability of a condition arising to call for United States trops to uphold the power of the United States.

Found Dead.

Woodbury, Minn., Dec. 30.—When William Slohr and Anton Huntman of St. Paul came to this place to visit William Zabel, they found their friend dead on the floor of his farm house. The body was partly frozen and had been gnawed by rats.

Yeggman Arrested.

Olivia, Minn, Dec. 30.—"Jimmie" Gaynor, who is regarded as one of the cleverest yeggmen who ever operated in the northwest, and two other alleged cracksmen, are under arrest in this place charged with the robbery of the state bank at Danube on Oct. 6, when $2,234 was secured.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

MATTERS OF INTEREST IN THE GOPHER STATE.

Estimate of Railroad Valuation—University Makes a Very Valuable Discovery.

Railroad Values.

St. Paul.—"Right of way values" on railroad land, as computed by D. C. Morgan, expert engineer for the state railroad commission, were placed in evidence in the hearing of the railroad rate cases before Judge C. E. Otis as master in chancery.

Mr. Morgan introduced his Exhibit A, which is a detailed valuation of the Northern Pacific's property in Minnesota. It differs in two particulars from Exhibit B. The item of land values is placed at $15,385,078.47, instead of $9,498,099.27, and an item of $1,613,612.76 is included for "adaptation and solidification of roadbed." This brings the total valuation of the Northern Pacific to $61,099,563.40, as present value, while its cost of reproduction, new, is placed at $69,397,954.87.

The experts have carefully determined actual value of land owned by the roads for terminals and for right of way. This was shown in Exhibit B. When it comes to acquire land for railroad purposes a higher figure has to be paid to cover damages to property. So for cost of reproduction the Exhibit A shows what the road would have to pay over the market value of its land. The average is 1.6 times the actual or market value.

Important Discovery.

Minneapolis.—Prof. George R. Frankforter, of the University of Minnesota, has perfected a machine which will probably evolve a new era in the manufacture of white print paper for use of publishers. The professor has discovered a process which will use up the hitherto useless waste in the manufacture of lumber.

Scientific men all over the world are watching the outcome of the new discovery. Small tests have proved successful and should larger tests prove that the theory is right, the white paper problem will no longer bother the world and the price of the material will be brought down to a proper basis again.

State Fair Need.

Hamline.—One and one-half million dollars is named by C. M. Griggs, for many years an important figure in the management of the Minnesota state fair, as the need of the state fair in the next five years, with additional help from the Twin City merchants and manufacturers in the way of a few years' advance rent for space in a new main building. Mr. Griggs would have the legislature appropriate $500,000 for 1909, $400,000 of which will be required for the new grandstand, and $200,000 every year for the next five years. The advance rent from the business men would amount to between $75,000 to $100,000.

The fair can never earn enough money to pay for its permanent buildings for exposition purposes, says Mr. Griggs. It will always take all the profits for maintenance, show purposes, parking of the grounds and expansion along several lines. In a letter to President B. F. Nelson of the Minnesota State Agricultural society, in Minneapolis, Mr. Griggs urges the need of more Twin City "boosts" for the fair, the necessity of a new grandstand, and, second only to the grandstand, a complete revision of the street car service to the fair grounds, whose woeful inadequacy he comments upon as being simply ridiculous.

Work on Iron Range.

Hibbing.—The United States Steel corporation has let stripping contracts in the Chisholm and Hibbing districts which will entail an expenditure of at least $2,000,000.

All of this work will be started in 1909 and will take from one to three years to complete. Some of the operations are already under way. The performance of the contracts will necessitate the employment of hundreds of men. The contracts in the aggregate are probably the largest ever let on the Mesaba range in one season by a single operator.

The ranges should hum with business next season. Some of the greatest stripping operations in the history of the Mesaba will be carried on simultaneously with the production of a tonnage of ore which, it is believed, will reach between 25,000,000 and 30,000,000 tons.

NEWS NOTES.

St. Paul—Railroads place different values on same property is testimony offered in state rate case hearing.

Minneapolis.—One of the most important engagements of the theatrical season at Bijou Opera House, Minneapolis, will be that of the great college play, "Strongheart," which will be seen at that playhouse the week of January 3rd.

Minneapolis.—The first flight of an airship in Minneapolis took place here. It was the Wilcox-Bennett aeroplane and the flight was made in the factory yard of the H. E. Wilcox Motor Car company on Marshall avenue northeast, where the machine was built.

Minneapolis.—Report of secretary of war urges supplying Minnesota artillery batteries with horses by government.

Farmington.—The local high school debating team was defeated by the Le Sueur Center team in the interscholastic debating league contest.

SO WAGS THE WORLD

By ANNE WARNER

(Copyright, by Bobbs-Merrill Co.)

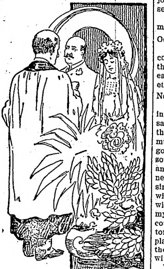
February first.

My birthday and I exceedingly merry thereat having in divers friends and much good wine beside two pasties and more of all than we could eat and drink had we been doubled. Afterwards to the playhouse and a very good play and hence to a supper the which most hot and comforting with a butt of brandy and divers cocktails and they being very full did make great sport and joke me that I had never taken a wife to which I replied neatly saying that for my part in my twenties did feel myself too young and in my thirties did never chance upon one comely and to my taste at which great applause. The applause being over did continue my speech and say that in my forties had had little time to think of aught but my own personal affairs, but that now being come to my fifties was well disposed to share them and they did all drink to that and smash their glasses with right good cheer prophesying my marriage and drinking long life to Her and me. My mind then a blank but home in some shape and the maid did get me to my room and what a head this morning! Misliketh me much to bethink me how I did comport myself, but a man is 50 but once.

To mine office where did buy and sell as usual.

February eighth.

To dine with H. Nevil and his wife and she a monstrous pleasant lady and the dinner good only the wine poor and my vest too tight which vastly misliked me, I being loth to grow stout and yet all at odds with my belts, the which trying me sadly for I do pay my tailor as many do not. And the niece a striking fine girl modest. To the Country club for a late supper, the which well-cooked but my vest much tighter and so home and to bed.



"Married This Day."

Railway stocks risen two points.

February twentieth.

Did take a box at the play and ask H. Nevil, his wife and niece and a supper afterwards and pretty to see how miss did refuse mine eyes and hardly speak two words, the which greatly to my admiration and after supper did lead her to the coach and press her hand.

March nineteenth.

Much agitated and all trembling and of a cold sweat. The Lord have mercy and me all unwitting until in some strange way do find myself today betrothed the which I do heartily pray to be for the good of all concerned.

No heart for stocks, but the same arising.

April sixteenth.

Do find the being betrothed more to my taste than anticipated and tell H. Nevil he shall be remembered with pointers when the market turns again.

Comes one Lasselle and makes a great tale of a mine and I with no time for him, but do set the office boy to look him up in Bradstreet.

These be busy days with a corner on parsnips.

May tenth.

The business of being director in Lasselle's mine ended this day and to a great dinner that he giveth in my honor and my portrait on all the cards the which pleaseth me mightily and I all complimented and congratulated and sly hints on my approaching marriage to the which I all smiles for Lord the thing being done one must be of good courage.

Quotations low, beshrew them.

June seventh (the Mountains).

Married this day and to do in a turmoil wheat being all a-rage and me forced to go home to dress before noon. Did scarce know where I was with Extras being cried outside the church window and H. Nevil giving the bride away and on the wrong side of the market by my advice. The bride hysteric in the carriage and at the station wept so that I was fair beside myself. Did bethink me to kiss her in the train, but small comfort to either. What will become of my affairs I know not, this place being all without stock reports and I half mad and with naught to pass the time.

August tenth.

This do be the hottest summer in many years and lest I forget to set it down more mad dogs than can well be handled. My wife very hystericky and forever in a smock and declareth she would be dead and married life a delusion, the which opinion I take small issue with having my hands full of business and Lasselle forever at my heels with our affair of the mine not to speak of H. Nevil which waileth continually over how he was caught short in the month of June. Beshrew me if I repent not of June on mine own behalf but am determined to live properly and so have dispatched a messenger to my cousin Sarah Badminton asking that she come to keep mine house.

August twentieth.

Comes Sarah Badminton this day and Lord but a plain woman, being flat like unto a board from her heels up unto her head.

Last night to the play where comes Lasselle and makes very merry and telleth jokes the which of great amusement to my wife while I find no mirth therein.

To my office where did buy and sell as usual.

September sixteenth.

My wife not well and strangely indisposed towards me yawning unduly and complaining that life is dull, yet gay enough for others and of a great joy over riding horseback with Lasselle.

To my office and H. Nevil all excitement over his margins.

October twenty-ninth.

Returned this day from a trip to the coast and find my wife no better although the doctor hath been with her each day. She saith the doctor adviseth quiet until spring.

November sixth.

My wife most nervous and there being no peace with her did discuss the same with Lasselle to-day and although unmarried yet did sympathize much and advise for me with a right good will telling me of a place in southern France where he had been and the same beyond all else for the nerves only lonely but that not so bad since he proposeth going there this winter himself and can see after my wife somewhat the which greatly to my relief and so home and did discourse thereon with Mistress Badminton the which drew a long face and plain to see was dead against the plan the which putting me in a fine temper with what a woman hath for brains.

Wheat rising and A. B. & C. going down comes H. Nevil short to borrow the which crowneth my fury his niece being so far from making me happy and he being the cause of all. But did indorse two notes for him and so home and to bed with a bad grace and glad that my wife has betaken herself to another room.

December ninth.

From the dock and my wife do be gone and now we may look for some peace the which sad enough needed.

December tenth.

Comes H. Nevill all distraught to say that it is about at the clubs that my wife will have a divorce and marry the doctor, on the which hearing I much annoyed and summon Mrs. Badminton who denyeth the doctor but asserteth Lasselle.

To mine office and D. & E. going up comes H. Nevil to borrow again the gall of which doth take me greatly.

January seventeenth.

Am all of a taking for that the papers in my wife's divorce do be filed into me this day and great to do when I learn that the cause she declareth is Sarah Badminton a woman as little comely as never was and mine own cousin. Verily the ways of a wife be past understanding.

April eleventh.

Free this day and being free comes Mrs. Badminton weeping and declareth she be ruined if I marry her not next the which doth so overcome me that ere I have time to rally she hath kissed me and called me her's.

To my office with a heavy heart having no assurance of how this second marriage will turn out and little hope but seeing H. Nevil with a long face did refuse to give him any inside information the which led to his going under about noon to my great joy for it was he who did get me in this marrying habit.

February first.

My birthday and Lord what eating and drinking the which being good beyond compare my wife staying in the pantry to keep the whole in trim and all my friends discoursing on my joy the which is truly great she being so plain that a man will never look at her and so loving that she adoreth me come smiles come frowns.

But that which doth astonish me much is that H. Nevil telleth me that she that was once my wife is of exceeding content with Lasselle a piece of news which I can scarce credit comparing him with myself.

But so wags the world.

NEW TEACHING PLAN

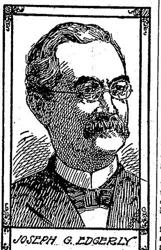
EDUCATION INNOVATION BEING TRIED IN EAST.

Schoolroom and Factory Combined in Latest Experiment—High-School-boys Spend Alternate Weeks in Shops.

New York.—Advanced ground in industrial educational work has been taken in Fitchburg, Mass. Educators in all parts of the country are watching the development of the ambitious undertaking with more than passing interest, as upon the success or failure of the departure will depend whether or not the plan is adopted elsewhere. This fall the second-year high-schoolboys received the privilege of learning a metal trade by going into the factories of the town to work one week at regular factory hours and to return to the schoolroom the following week, thus alternating between factory and schoolroom throughout the year. Twenty boys were elected to take the new course, and the reports for the first three months of the experiment are altogether favorable, not one of the 20 boys having shown any desire to abandon the combination of schoolroom and factory work.

It is the first attempt of the kind in a public school. A course similar to this one has been in operation at the University of Cincinnati for older boys, and the Fitchburg experiment is patterned after the Cincinnati idea. The course is one of four years, the first year consisting exclusively of schoolroom work and the three following years of theoretical and practical training equally apportioned. The factory owners, seven of whom are co-operating with the school department, say that the high-schoolboys are making better progress than the full-time apprentices, and Superintendent Joseph G. Edgerly of the Fitchburg public schools reports that the schoolroom work of these boys is fully up to the standard.



The success of the Fitchburg plan seems so well assured that steps are being taken in a number of other cities, whose school authorities have been in correspondence with Superintendent Edgerly, to begin similar courses next year. Superintendent Edgerly and Principal John G. Thompson of the Massachusetts State Normal school at Fitchburg, who has taken a deep interest in the working out of the plan, believe they have gone a long way toward solving the problem of how best to keep the boys in the high school for the full four years' course, a problem that has been the despair of educators in all manufacturing towns, such as is Fitchburg. The belief of many parents, whether right or wrong, that their boys, who must eventually find their way into the shops, were wasting time in school when they could be learning a trade has been the chief cause of the falling off in the enrollment of second and third-year high school classes.

Inability of parents to support their boys during the four years they were in the high school has also unquestionably been a big factor, but this has been eliminated in Fitchburg, as the boys who take the shop-work course will be able to earn enough to clothe themselves, and even pay board, without interference with their school work, since they receive regular apprentice wages for the actual time they work in the factories. The first year they receive ten cents an hour, and they work approximately 1,650 hours. Working the same number of hours the two following years, they receive 11 and 12½ cents an hour, respectively, and they are as well fitted for their trade as if they had put in all of their time in the factory—better fitted, because of a livelier intelligence and ability to use their heads as well as their hands, Superintendent Edgerly says.

The shopwork consists of instruction under practical overseers in the operation of lathes, planers, drilling machines, bench and floor work and such other machine work, according to the ability of the apprentice, as pertains to the particular branch of manufacture of the shop where the boy is employed. Of the 20 boys who entered the Fitchburg shops last August, 16 are learning the machinist's trade, two are receiving practical instruction in pattern making and two in drafting. The co-operative course includes English, mathematics, with tables and simple shop problems; mechanics, including simple machines; freehand and mechanical drawing.

FARM AND GARDEN

FARM QUESTIONS.

A Suggestion for Study of Arthmetic for Farmer's Children.

We wonder how many of the pupils in our public schools when given a question in mental arithmetic merely memorize it; and whether they could solve it if apples were substituted for potatoes. Ex-Gov. Hoard told us a funny story last year about one of his own grandchildren who had failed on a simple question in mental arithmetic, says Editor Wallace, in Wallaces' Farmer. Upon his expressing great surprise the youngster replied: "If you had given me that in potatoes instead of in apples I could have done it!"

We wonder how many teachers in rural schools frame questions of their own on farm lines, so as to compel the pupil to work them out by the rules that should be applied to those in the book. We have a very vivid recollection of being caught up that way ourselves one time to our very great humiliation, and the only excuse we had to offer was: "That question was not in the book." The answer that made our ears burn was: "What is the use of studying sums in the book if they don't teach you to do sums outside of the book?"

As an example of the questions which any teacher may frame, and the solution of which would compel pupils to think along farm lines, we quote the following from an instruction bulletin given out by the Pennsylvania Agricultural college:

"1. If six pecks of wheat are sown on one acre, how much seed wheat will be required for a field 40 rods long and 25 rods wide?

"2. If 16 four-inch tile are required for a rod, how many tile will be needed for a ditch a mile and a quarter long?

"3. The wagon and wheat weigh 5,530 pounds. The wagon alone weighs 1,300 pounds. What is the wheat worth at 88 cents per bushel?

"4. A row of corn shocks takes up a space twice the width of the space between two rows of corn. The length of the space is 40 rods. How much ground is occupied by the shock row?

"5. There are 210 rows of corn on the long side of a field and 120 on the short side. What will the cutting cost at five cents for each shock ten hills square?

"6. At $28 per ton for commercial fertilizer, what will it cost to fertilize a field 40 by 60 rods if 250 pounds are used on each acre?

"7. One-half ton of lime per acre was sowed on a field 35 rods long and 24 rods wide. How many tons of lime were used?

"8. It costs 1½ cents per bushel for threshing oats and 2½ cents for wheat. What will the threshing of 1,850 bushels of oats and 280 bushels of wheat cost?

"9. A field is a half mile long and a quarter of a mile wide; if 2¼ acres are plowed each day, how many days will be required to plow it?

"10. A man hauls at one trip 1,980 pounds of milk to a cremery. What does he receive at 15 cents per hundred?"

Questions in connection with farm business come up day by day. What more profitable amusement could there be in the evening than for the father to have the boys and girls figure them out for him? His experience will be different from ours if the farmer does not say: "Tut, tut! Is that all you can do in the way of figures? What's the use in sending you to school if you cannot do better than that?"

HANDY COAL BIN.

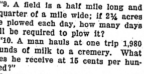
The Slanting Floor Makes It Easy to Get the Coal Out.

The accompanying illustration taken from Prairie Farmer shows a really practical receptacle which may be made of scantling of any size. The roof should be hinged so that the coal may be put in at the top, and the floor should be made the necessary slant so it will empty itself. The doorway should be hinged and the trough wide enough to admit of the use of a shovel.



Improved Coal Bin.

Builds Up a Soil.

Alfalfa is said by experts to be the greatest plant known for the building up of crop-worn soils. In Nebraska this crop is looked upon as one of the mainstays. Alfalfa gathers the nitrogen from the air and puts it back into the soil from which it will be drawn when that land is used for grain growing. Some men hold that this is the best forerunner of the corn crop, some even going so far as to say that to precede corn with alfalfa is even more important than selecting seed corn.

WHAT THE DOLLIES HAD.

Small Wonder That the Little Mother Was Really Alarmed.

Little Mary was really very ill. Mother said she was sure it was an attack of appendicitis, but Grandma was equally sure the little one was threatened with convulsions.

The argument waxed warm in Mary's presence, and appropriate remedies were used, and the next day she was better.

Coming into her mother's room during her play she said:

"Mamma, two of my dollies are very sick this morning."

"Indeed, dear, I am very sorry. What is the matter with them?"

"Well I don't really know, mamma, but I think Gwendolyn has 'a pint o'spiders' and Marguerite is going to have 'envulsions.'"

INTOLERABLE ITCHING.

Fearful Eczema All Over Baby's Face —Professional Treatment Failed.

A Perfect Cure by Cuticura.

"When my little girl was six months old I noticed small red spots on her right cheek. They grew so large that I sent for the doctor but, instead of helping the eruption, his ointment seemed to make it worse. Then I went to a second doctor who said it was eczema. He also gave me an ointment which did not help either. The disease spread all over the face and the eyes began to swell. The itching grew intolerable and it was a terrible sight to see. I consulted doctors for months, but they were unable to cure the baby. I paid out from $20 to $30 without relief. One evening I began to use the Cuticura Remedies. The next morning the baby's face was all white instead of red. I continued until the eczema entirely disappeared. Mrs. P. E. Gumbin, Sheldon, Ia., July 13,'08."

How Men and Women Face Death.

How do men and women face death when the sentence is pronounced by the doctor? A medical man tells us his experience. Tell the man of higher type and greater intelligence, he says, that he is facing death and he begins to fight, demands a consultation, talks about going to specialists and fights grimly to the finish. Tell a woman the same facts, and she lies back to await her fate. All women are fatalists. On the other hand, tell a man that he has one chance in a thousand to recover if he will undergo an operation, and he will trust to his own strength and endurance rather than undergo the knife. The woman will choose the thousandth chance and submit to the operation with astounding calmness.—Woman's Life.

Odd Names of Maryland Farms.

The curious names given to tracts of land by the owners in olden times are illustrated in a conveyance recorded in Liber W. G., No 60, folio 57. It was executed in 1790 and conveyed from Joshua Stevenson to Richard Gettings five tracts of land in Baltimore county, the consideration being £200. The name of each tract and its dimensions are as follows: My Sweet Girl, My Friend and Pitcher, 62 acres; Here Is Life Without Care and Love Without Fear, 41¼ acres; The Unexpected Discovery, 262 acres; Hug Me Snug, 15 acres, and Stevenson's Cow Pasture, With Little I am Content, 22 acres.—Baltimore Sun.

There is one good thing about the gas bill. It is a monthly lesson in punctuality.—Washington Times.

Can't Twiddle Their Thumbs.

The gorilla and chimpanzee, which belong to the higher order of apes, have many points of resemblance to man, but there is one thing they cannot do—that is, twiddle their thumbs. In the gorilla the thumb is short and does not reach much beyond the bottom of the first joint of the forefinger. It is very much restricted in its movements, and the animal can neither twiddle his thumbs nor turn them round so that the tips describe a circle. There are the same number of bones in the hand of a gorilla as in the hand of a man, but the thumbs of the monkey have no separate flexor or bending muscle. This is why a monkey always keeps the thumb on the same side as the fingers and never bends it round any object that may be grasped. In the gorilla the web between the fingers extends to the second joint, the fingers taper to the tips, and there is a callosity on the knuckles on which the animal rests when walking on all fours.

County Printing Let

The county board had its first meeting for this year at Red Lake Falls on Tuesday and commenced business by electing Commissioner Lindquist as chairman. The bonds of the various new county officials were duly accepted and the new officials took the place of the old ones. There was considerable routine business transacted and a large number of bills allowed.

The greatest interest centered in the letting of the county printing for the ensuing year for which there was three bids submitted, by the Plummer Pioneer, the Red Lake Falls Gazette and the Thief River Falls News respectively. The Pioneer offered to do the work at a trifle lower figures than last year and to mail a copy of the tax list financial statement and commissioners proceedings to each taxpayer in the county free of charge. The Gazette bid was a little lower than the Pioneer's and provided for the publication of these items in the Gazette and the St Hilaire Spectator only. The News offered to furnish the tax list financial statement and commissioners proceedings in supplement form for every legal paper in the county to circulate and a at price that was away below the other bids. Commissioners Shaw and Aubol expressed them selves as being in favor of the Pioneer bid for the reasons that the Pioneer, as the official paper during the past year had given the people of the county the best service they had ever had at a very reasonable figure and that it offered to continue the same splendid service at a very low rate. But Commissioner Demann, Pigeon and Lindquist had evidently decided the matter already and they voted for the Gazette. In all fairness and honesty it would seem that the printing should have have been awarded to the Thief River Falls News. The Pioneer offered the best service at any price. The bid of the Gazette, from the standpoint of good service, had practically no right to be considered, and from the standpoint of low price we cannot see how any man, commissioner or otherwise could give it preference over the bid of the News, and expect the people to believe him fair or honest in such action. The fact remains, however, that the printing is being done for about half, or less, than the rate formerly charged by the old printing "combine" for years and the Pioneer is willing to take the blame and the cussing the other fellows bestow upon us for breaking down their combination for the public good.

Monkeys Like Scrapping.

"Monkeys are in a class by themselves," said the circus man. "If one of them has red hair he is sure to be a dandy scrapper. The best fighter is always the leader. They hang together and bow and scrape before the boss just like a good many people. Monkeys with red faces and flat heads will whip the life out of those smaller than they are, but will run like the wind when it comes to an even break. A monkey riot is a funny spectacle. Even in the same cage you will find groups herded together as if there was some class distinction and the lines were drawn tightly. If two of the big ones come together in a row the others generally stand off and let them have it out, but if any of the little ones get to scrapping then the father and mother are apt to mix in, and the next step is a general row. We separate them by turning on the hose and punish them by locking up the den so that they cannot get any peanuts from the crowd and hold back their meals. This plan puts them on their good behavior for awhile at least. The monkey likes to eat and likes to be noticed."

Slightly Mixed.

They had just set up housekeeping and were working on the plan of economy. The bathtub needed a coat of varnish. He promised to attend to it if she would order the varnish.

"You'll find the varnish in the closet with the groceries, dear," she said a day or so later, "and the can opener in the knife drawer."

He opened the can and, according to his contract, applied the coat of varnish and then left it to dry.

The soup for dinner that day had to be abandoned, for somehow it possessed a peculiar paint shop odor that was nauseating. After dinner he took her to inspect his work on the bathtab. Now that it had dried it had a certain unnatural appearance. The top and sides were streaked, and here and there little lumps clung to it.

"The man said that was the best varnish," she explained, taking up the can of varnish for an examination, "but—why, dear, you have varnished the bathtub with the ox tail soup!"

"Then it was the varnish we ate, dear," he added, horror stricken. — Lippincott's.

Another Land Man Commits Suicide.

Minneapolis was treated to another sensation on Wednesday morning by the suicide of Harry C. Dunham, a member of the real estate firm of Dunham & McMurray Dunham shot himself at his home on Elliot Avenue while officers were waiting to take him to the central police station to answer to the charge of swindling.

It is alleged that Dunham had been doing some systematic swindling of clients and the amount uncovered, and for which he was to have been arrested, was about $7,500. It is stated that several land deals which he was manipulating were wholly fictitious and that he was wholly without means personally.

Post Office Is Robbed.

The postoffice at Strathcona was robbed last week, the robbers getting away with $35 in cash and $10 worth of stamps. Hans Lerum the postmaster usually sleeps in the building, but was attending a masquerade ball and the thieves took advantage of his absence. They left no clue as to their identity. It is believed that the robbers came to Thief River Falls after doing the job and a sharp lookout is being made by the local officers.

Tom Wensvold is here from Fosston for a short visit at the homs of Sam Lovaas.

Osten Ostroen went to McIntosh on Monday for a short visit with old friends.

Selma Swanson arrived home on Wednesday of last week from North Dakota where she has been working since early last summer.

Jens and Thea Grothe and Oscar and Selma Lovaas left on Saturday last for Thief River Falls to spend the rest of the winter attending school.

Gunnar Rysstad was at Plummer on Saturday last to meet Mr. and Mrs. Ole Dahle who were expected to arrive home from Grafton on that date but failed to come.

Nels Askeland and Nels Solheim, two of the pioneer farmers from the north part of the township, were in Plummer on Monday doing some necessary shopping.

A number of very bright looking young ladies from Equality township were here to attend the Busy Bee auction sale and they bought up nearly the entire stock offered for sale. We thank you, girls, and wont forget to return the favor another time.

The Busy Bee Society's auction sale that was held last Friday night was one of the best ever, as was also the basket party. There was a big crowd present and the Society feels very thankful to all those who came and helped make the affair so very successful and enjoyable.

Mayfield Men Improving.

C. D. Whaley, of Mayfield township who went to St. Paul a couple of weeks ago for hospital treatment, writes us that he underwent a surgical operation in St. Joseph's hospital, on December 29th. He states that the operation was entirely successful and that he is now improving steadily. Mr. Whaley states that Charlie Wilson, who has been in the same hospital for several weeks, is also improving steadily but not so rapidly, owing to the more serious nature of the disease.

Both these gentlemen have a host of warm friends in this vicinity who will be well pleased to hear of the improvement in their health.

County Attorney's Annual Report.

The annual report of County Attorney, Thomas Germo, to the Attorney General of the State of Minnesota, of the criminal cases arising under the statutes in Red Lake County during the year ending December 31st, 1908, discloses a very satisfactory and successful work in that office.

Fifty-three cases were prosecuted during the year. Six of these were in the district court, of which two resulted in conviction, one in acquittal and three are pending. Forty-seven were prosecuted in municipal and justice courts, a great majority of these being tried in the municipal court of Thief River Falls. Of these thirty-five were convicted, two acquitted and eleven dismissed on motion of county attorney. Seven served jail sentences and twenty-three were fined in sums all the way from $3.00 and cost to $150.00 and costs each.

The report further shows that the cost of prosecution amounted to $227.16 while the fines and costs collected amounted to $768.79.

In the number of cases tried, this indicates a slight falling off from that of previous year, since sixty-five cases were reported for that year.

Stockholders Meeting.

Notice is hereby given that the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Clearwater Mercantile Co. will be held at Plummer on Monday, January 18th, 1909, commencing at 10 o'clock A. ## EARTHQUAKE NOTES.

Reports from the earthquake-stricken district of southern Italy and Sicily indicate that about 200,000 persons perished in the appalling disaster. In Messina and Reggio alone the dead number 110,000. Another severe shock completed the destruction of Messina and it was feared killed more persons. The survivors were reported to be suffering terribly for food, clothing and surgical attendance. The king and queen personally aided the victims. It was feared many Americans perished, as there were 90 in one Messina hotel. The report of the death of Consul Cheney and his wife was confirmed. The American Red Cross society voted $50,000 to the relief fund, J. Pierpont Morgan sent $10,000 and the king of Italy gave $40,000.

Good progress was made with relief work in southern Italy and Sicily, many soldiers and sailors being utilized, and hundreds of refugees being taken to Naples and other cities. The report of the destruction of the Lipari islands was unfounded. Two more earthquake shocks were felt at Messina. The king and queen were tireless in the work of aiding the suffering. American contributions were steadily and rapidly growing. Taormina, where there were many Americans, was uninjured.

A violent earthshock, lasting three seconds, and during which the Stromboli volcano began eruption, occurred on Stromboli island. The houses on the island were badly damaged and the populace fled to the streets in panic, but no one was hurt. Relief measures for the quake sufferers progressed well, Ambassador Griscom taking a prominent part. The Atlantic battleship fleet arrived at Suez and began passing through the canal in order to reach Messina speedily if needed. Two vessels were sent ahead with supplies. The king and queen of Italy returned to Rome.

Congress unanimously voted $800,000 for the relief of the Italian earthquake sufferers, in response to a message from President Roosevelt. Ambassador Griscom at Rome chartered a steamer for the work of aiding the survivors. He delivered to Count Taverna, head of the Italian Red Cross, $250,000 sent by the American Red Cross. The king proclaimed martial law in the devastated district, and Messina and Reggio were ordered evacuated.

LEGISLATURE BEGINS

MINNESOTA SOLONS MEET IN THIRTY-SIXTH SESSION.

The Senate Organizes Quickly. The House Elects Rockne of Zumbrota Speaker.

St. Paul, Jan. 5.—The thirty-sixth Minnesota legislature came into being at noon today, when both houses met and perfected the organization for the session. The opening day was uneventful, in spite of some threatening clouds which hung in the atmosphere during the morning. Senators Peterson and A. L. Hanson, republicans who had been left out of the patronage "combine" tried to organize a movement to overturn it with the aid of the democratic members. The slate had a majority of members pledged, however, and finding it impossible to win, the insurgents yielded gracefully. In the house a similar effort was made, directed at the caucus nominee for chaplain—this was carried to the floor of the house. A. J. Rockne was elected speaker with 92 votes to 21 for James Handlan, democrat. The three prohibitionists voting for Mr. Rockne.

Committees were not appointed today and both houses adjourned after adopting a few routine resolutions. They will meet at 10 o'clock tomorrow for short business sessions and half an hour later will assemble in joint session to hear Governor Johnson's inaugural address.

Senate Assembles at Noon.

The state senate was called to order at noon by Lieutenant Governor Eberhart. Senator Laybourn of Duluth was elected secretary pro tem. Chief Justice Start administered the oath of office to the lieutenant governor, and Senator Laybourn then called the roll, showing all present except Senator James Johnston of Todd county, who is ill. The chief justice then gave the oath to Senator George R. French of Winona county, who succeeds the late Senator Fitzpatrick.

Prayer was offered by the chaplain, Rev. B. B. Jonsson of Minneota. The senate slate was then adopted, the roll being called on the secretaries and sergeant-at-arms. The other officers were named by resolution, offered by Senator Laybourn, and carried unanimously on roll call. Sixty-one yeas and no nays. The list of officers is as follows:

Secretary of the senate, George W. Peachey; first assistant secretary, W. A. Simonton; second assistant secretary, John H. Mitchell; secretary to the lieutenant governor, A. D. Brown; third assistant secretary, I. L. Inglbritsen; fourth assistant secretary, E. V. Nyquist; assistant enrolling clerk, W. E. Hutchinson; assistant engrossing clerk, John L. Curtis; second assistant sergeant-at-arms, John H. Ness; clerk of engrossing committee, August Lundquist; janitor senate chamber, John Coquire; assistant janitor, Winfred Rutledge; postoffice messenger, Philip Hale; keeper of coat room, Albert Boetner; doorkeeper, Eldon Braley; assistant doorkeepers, W. R. Hoskins and O. T. Newhouse; assistant sergeants-at-arms, O. F. Henkel, N. A. Nelson, P. O. Dassett, Andrew Homgren; file clerk, Alexisus Anderson; assistant file clerk, James Doran; clerk committee on judiciary, E. A. Montgomery; assistant clerk on judiciary, Charles S. Kidder; clerk committee on reapportionment, O. L. Domberg; assistant clerk committee on reapportionment, Gregory P. Witt; clerk committee on railroads, William Peterson; clerk committee on taxes and tax laws, Albert P. Krost; clerk committee on general legislation, federal legislation, public parks, S. W. Frazier; clerk committee on municipal corporations, forestry and fire protection, game and fish laws, E. A. Scott; clerk committee on dairy products and livestock, retrenchment and reform, rules, C. L. Foss; clerk committee on corporations, legislative expenses, public parks, Walter Wieland; clerk committee on banks and banking, libraries, printing and immigration, John E. Maden; clerk committee on grain and warehouse, roads and bridges, public lands, agriculture, Clark Henry, Jr.; clerk of committee on towns and counties, drainage, manufacture, hospitals for insane, Otto Biercamp; clerk committees to be assigned, W. E. Ebbling; stenographers, Kate Sexton, Mrs. L. C. Goodnow, Alta Kingsley, Edna Gagacki, W. A. Nord, L. H. Hansen, Gertrude Durkee, Edith I. Brown, Margaret Dille.

To Change Railway Taxation.

Senator Manly Fosseen will introduce a constitutional amendment providing a change in the system of railway taxation. His amendment provides for abandoning the gross earnings system entirely and going over to the ad valorem system, which is in use in nearly all the states. This also provides for levying special assessment for a permanent improvement against railroad property.

Senator Fosseen will introduce his basement school bill again. He made a fight two years ago to stop the use of basements for regular school sessions. He has altered the bill this time so as to allow the use of basements for manual training and the domestic arts, also to allow the use of two basement roo m nise shrdl hrdll two basement rooms in each building during 1910 and one in each building during 1911.

Several resolutions were adopted. One by Senator Seward, adopted the rules of the last session; one by Senator Dunn, provided for appointment of seven pages at $2.50 a day. Senator Seward moved the appointment of a committee of nine on rules and the following were named. Seward, Smith, Schaller, Durment, Alderman, Laybourn, Stephens, Campbell and Hinton.

On motion of Senator Clague, a committee of three was appointed on mileage, consisting Senators Clague, Coller and A. L. Hanson. Senator F. H. Peterson moved the apopintment of a committee of three to act with a similar committee from the house to wait on Governor Johnson and notify him that the legislature was organized. This committee consists of Senators Peterson, Schaller and Smith.

Senate adjourned until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning and will meet in joint session with the house to hear the governor's message at 11 o'clock.

House Convenes.

With the customary simple exercises handed down by tradition, the house of representatives convened today at noon in its thirty-sixth ordinary session.

It devolved upon Julius A. Schmahl, secretary of state, to call the house to order. He appointed John G. Lennon of Minneapolis temporary chief clerk. The members took the oath in bunches, each bunch included all the members from each of the nine congressional districts. Justice C. L. Brown of the supreme court administered the oath.

This formality took some time, but was without incident until the Ramsey delegation was called, when a liberal handful of applause was given to the party. Thomas Brady, John Selb and Oscar Christenson attracted the applause.

No hand was given to the Hennepin delegation, even with Frank Nimocks' vest and other attractive features.

After the men had been sworn, Mr. Schmahl called for nominations for speaker.

Mr. Rockne was nominated by George A. McKenzie and the nomination was seconded by Frank White. T. J. Brady, on behalf of the democrats, nominated John Handlan of St. Paul. On roll call Mr. Rockne received 92 votes to 21 for Handlan. After declaring A. J. Rockne elected speaker Mr. Schmahl appointed Representatives McKenzie, Handlan, Lawrence H. Johnson, Wells, Ben Dixon and Nolan to escort the speaker-elect to the chair.

Mr. Rockne made a very brief speech of acceptance, thanking the members for their votes and promising to do his best to merit their approval. He said that it would be his endeavor to give each fair treatment.

The roll calls were then ordered for the other officers. Archibald Bernard of St. Paul was chosen chief clerk; J. A. Arneson of Herman and F. J. Austin of Chisholm were assistant clerks.

There was no break in the caucus slate until the nominations for chaplain were called. John McGrath presented the name of Rev. C. W. B. Ellis of Hawley, the caucus selection. T. J. Brady, on behalf on the minority, nominated Rev. R. D. Phillips of Hastings, who was chaplain at the former session of the legislature. A. K. Ware of Northfield broke away from the caucus by nominating Rev. W. R. Keesey. This brought Ben Dixon to his feet with a plea for harmony. Many of the republican members voted for Mr. Phillips, while ten or more refused to vote at all. The result of the roll call was as follows: Ellis 65; Phillips 28, and Keesey 4. Rev. Mr. Ellis having received a majority, was declared elected chaplain of the house.

Lawrence H. Johnson moved the appointment of a committee of three to inform the governor that the house was organized and ready to receive the message. Speaker Rockne appointed Lawrence H. Johnson, W. H. Putnam and James Handlan. The committee returned after a short absence and reported that Governor Johnson would deliver his message to the house at 11 a. m. tomorrow.

In the assignment of seats for the session, former speaker Lawrence H. Johnson was given first choice. He protested against being singled out in this manner and moved to amend the resolution designating the manner of selecting seats, but his motion was voted down by an overwhelming vote. The next choice was given to Representatives Nolan, Dorsey, Wells and Zeith, who are serving their fifth term. Next came the Grand Army veterans and the members who are more than 60 years of age. The next choice went to members who have served in former legislatures, while the new members took what was left.

The first appointment announced by Speaker Rockne was that of William Lovely of Minneapolis, who was appointed sergeant-at-arms of the reserve gallery.

CHIEF SAYS HOUSE MISUNDERSTOOD

Message to Lower Branch on Secret Service.

BIG STICK FALLS ON FOUR

Champions of Provision to Limit Scope of Investigators Are Raked Over the Coals by Roosevelt—Federal Sleuths Defended by Executive.

Washington.—President Roosevelt's big stick crashed down upon the heads of Representatives Tawney of Minnesota, Smith of Iowa, Sherley of Kentucky, and Fitzgerald of New York, when the executive sent a special message to the house of representatives, berating those solons for being champions of the successful move to place limitations upon the scope of the secret service.

The president also declared that the interpretation of the house of the secret service clause in his last message was misunderstood, and had there been any evidence which would point to the necessity of an investigation of members, such evidence would long ago have been turned over to the proper authorities.

The message was in answer to the resolution transmitted from the house in which the representatives asked for evidence upon which Mr. Roosevelt based his statements that the "chief argument in favor of the provision was that the congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret service men."

For the Ananias Club.

The message in part:

"I am wholly at a loss to understand the concluding portion of the resolution. I have made no charges of corruption against congress nor against any member of the present house. If I had proof of such corruption affecting any member of the house in any matter as to which the federal government has jurisdiction, action would at once be brought, as was done in the cases of Senators Mitchell and Burton, and Representatives Williamson, Herrman and Driggs, at different times since I have been president. This would simply be doing my duty in the execution and enforcement of the laws without respect to persons. But I do not regard it as within the province or the duties of the president to report to the house 'alleged delinquencies' of members, or the supposed 'corrupt action' of a member 'in his official capacity.' The membership of the house is by the constitution placed within the power of the house alone. In the prosecution of criminals and the enforcement of the laws the president must resort to the courts of the United States.

"In the third and fourth clauses of the preamble it is stated that the meaning of my words is that 'the majority of the congressmen are in fear of being investigated by secret service men' and that 'congress as a whole was actuated by that motive in enacting the provision in question,' and that this is an impeachment of the honor and integrity of the congress. These statements are not, I think, in accordance with the facts."

Misunderstood, He Says.

"This allegation in the resolution, therefore, must certainly be due to an entire failure to understand my message.

"The resolution continues: 'That the president be requested to transmit to the house any evidence upon which he based his statements that the "chief argument in favor of the provision was that the congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret service men." This statement, which was an attack upon no one, still less upon the congress, is sustained by the facts.

"If you will turn to the Congressional Record for May 1 last, pages 5553 to 5560, inclusive, you will find the debate on this subject. Mr. Tawney of Minnesota, Mr. Smith of Iowa, Mr. Sherley of Kentucky, and Mr. Fitzgerald of New York appear in this debate as the special champions of the provision referred to. Messrs. Parsons, Bennet and Driscoll were the leaders of those who opposed the adoption of the amendment and upheld the right of the government to use the most efficient means possible in order to detect criminals and to prevent and punish crime. The amendment was carried in the committee of the whole, where no votes of the individual members are recorded, so I am unable to discriminate by mentioning the members who voted for and the members who voted against the provision, but its passage, the journal records, was greeted with applause. I am well aware, however, that in any case of this kind many members who have no particular knowledge of the point at issue are content simply to follow the lead of the committee which had considered the matter, and I have no doubt that many members of the house simply followed the lead of Messrs. Tawney and Smith."

Secret Service Is Defended.

After soundly remonstrating with Representatives Tawney, Smith, Sherley and Fitzgerald for their stand at the last session in favor of placing limitations upon the duties of secret service operatives, the president set about to defend the operations of that branch of the federal government and declared that the scope of the department should be extremely wide in order that all criminals might be brought to justice and that there might be no unjust discriminations. He also pointed out numerous instances where the powers of the department had brought justice upon the heads of criminals and cited cases within the memory of the present administration. Mr. Roosevelt also declared that none of the members of the house had ever been investigated as set forth in various allegations, the gist of which was appended to the message.

Asks Reversal of Action.

Concluding, the president said:

"In conclusion, I most arnestly ask, in the name of good government and decent administration, in the name of honesty and for the purpose of bringing to justice violators of the federal laws wherever they may be found, whether in public or private life, that the action taken by the house last year be reversed. When this action was taken, the senate committee, under the lead of the late Senator Allison, having before it a strongly-worded protest from Secretary Cortelyou like that he had sent to Mr. Tawney, accepted the secretary's views; and the senate passed the bill in the shape presented by Senator Allison. In the conference, however, the house conferees insisted on the retention of the provision they had inserted, and the senate yielded.

"The chief of the secret service is paid a salary utterly inadequate to the importance of his functions and to the admirable way in which he has performed them. I earnestly urge that it may be increased to $6,000 per annum. I also urge that the secret service be placed where it properly belongs, and made a bureau in the department of justice, as the chief of the secret service has repeatedly requested; but whether this is done or not, it should be explicitly provided that the secret service can be used to detect and punish crime wherever it is found.

LAME BACK PRESCRIPTION

The increased use of "Toris" for lame back and rheumatism is causing considerable discussion among the medical fraternity. It is an almost infallible cure when mixed with certain other ingredients and taken properly. The following formula is effective: "To one-half pint of good whiskey add one ounce of Toris Compound and one ounce Syrup Sarsaparilla Compound. Take in tablespoonful doses before each meal and before retiring."

Toris compound is a product of the laboratories of the Globe Pharmaceutical Co., Chicago, but it as well as the other ingredients can be had from any good druggist.

The captain—See here, you've give seventeen men bases on balls! Dis here's a ball game, not no six-day walkin' match!

Electricity's Beginnings.

The term "electricity" was derived from the Greek word meaning amber. Electricity itself is earliest described by Theophrastus (321 B. C.) and Pliny (70 A. D.), who mention the power of amber to attract straw and dry leaves. Dr. Gilbert of Colchester, physician to Queen Elizabeth (1540-1603) may be considered the founder of the science, as he appears to have been the first philosopher who carefully repeated the observations of the ancients and applied to them the principles of philosophical investigation.

Cuticura Soon Cured His Eczema.

"An itching humor covered both my hands and got up over my wrists and even up to the elbows. The itching and burning were terrible. My hands got all scaly and when I scratched, the surface would be covered with blisters and then get raw. The eczema got so bad that I could not move my thumbs without deep cracks appearing. I went to my doctor, but his medicine could only stop the itching. At night I suffered so fearfully that I could not sleep. I could not bear to touch my hands with water. This went on for three months and I was fairly worn out. At last I got the Cuticura Remedies and in a month I was cured. Walter H. Cox, 16 Somerset St., Boston, Mass., Sept. 25, 1908."

The Unexpected.

The judge was about to pass sentence upon the condemned man.

"In view of certain contingent circumstances," he said, "I'm inclined to treat you with leniency."

A veiled woman who was sitting at a little distance suddenly burst into tears.

"Are you the prisoner's wife?" his honor inquired.

The woman could only nod.

"I think that in view of all these mitigating influences," the judge resumed, "I will fix three years—"

The veiled woman suddenly gasped

"It ain't half enough, judge; it ain't half enough!" she wildly shrieked.

THEN AND NOW

Complete Recovery from Coffee Ills.

"About nine years ago my daughter, from coffee drinking, was on the verge of nervous prostration," writes a Louisville lady. "She was confined for the most part to her home.

"When she attempted a trip down town she was often brought home in a cab and would be prostrated for days afterwards.

"On the advice of her physician she gave up coffee and tea, drank Postum, and ate Grape-Nuts for breakfast.

"She liked Postum from the very beginning and we soon saw improvement. To-day she is in perfect health, the mother of five children, all of whom are fond of Postum.

"She har recovered, is a member of three charity organizations and a club, holding an office in each. We give Postum and Grape-Nuts the credit for her recovery."

GOVERNOR JOHNSON'S MESSAGE

THE GOVERNOR INFORMS LEGISLATURE OF STATE'S NEEDS.

DELIVERED IN JOINT CONVENTION

Some Interesting Facts and Figures Are Very Ably Presented—Question of Railroad and Timber Laws Are Fully Brought Out.

For the third time it becomes my duty, as it is my privilege, under the Constitution to address the Legislature. giving my views on such matters as may appear to me to be of general concern to the people, and which may be of value in promoting the general domestic welfare.

Fortunately for us all, the last Legislature did its work so well that the problems confronting you are not so numerous as in other years. Those we have, however, are not less important, and they will necessarily require the best thought and energy of all who contribute officially to the business of the state.

We have much cause for congratulation in the general prosperity of the people and of the excellent condition of the affairs of the state particularly. A glance at the financial affairs of the commonwealth is certainly reassuring. The report of the state auditor reveals the fact during the past two years there has been added to the

| | |
|---|---|
| Permanent school fund ...... | $1,885,248.79 |
| Permanent university fund... | 24,959.25 |
| Internal improvement land fund ........................ | 16,185.85 |
| Swamp land fund ............. | 331,099.97 |

Permanent School Fund.

The permanent school fund had, on July 31, 1908, reached the splendid total of $19,709,383.91, and is now approximately $20,000,000, and placing us at the head of all of the states in this particular. The fund is safely invested in state, municipal, school and other lands. This amount will be augmented from year to year, and with the proper development of our mineral, timber and other resources will in time exceed an hundred million dollars. The permanent university fund has reached the total of $1,413,817.35; the internal improvement land fund, $2,939,671.62; and the swamp land fund, $1,243,272.35. The state auditor in his report to you has also given to you his estimate of receipts and expenditures for the coming three years. According to his estimate, the receipts for 1909 will be $8,265,690.67, with estimated disbursements for the same year, $7,735,916.86. For 1910, the income is estimated at $6,940,000, with expenses aggregating $6,425,800. For 1911, the receipts are estimated to be $7,040,000 with disbursements of $6,808,800. The total estimated revenue for the three years he places at $22,245,690.67, and expenditures of $20,970,516.85.

Railroads.

Although the first mile of railroad was not laid in Minnesota until four years after the adoption of the state constitution, today Minnesota's railway investment of $400,000,000 is equalled by that of only four other states, and its 8,200 miles of main track exceeds the total of the six New England states. In twenty-five years, our railway freight tonnage has multiplied six-fold, the average freight and passenger rate has been cut in half, while the state taxes on gross earnings have multiplied eight-fold to a total of $3,500,000 a year. Unknown in the iron world until 1884, Minnesota has contributed to the world's wealth in twenty-four years over $600,000,000 worth of iron ore, and now has over 1,000,000,000 tons in sight with new discoveries every season. Our annual iron ore shipment of approximately 30,000,000 tons is more than half the total American output and nearly one-fourth the world total; while the assessed valuation of $185,000,000 applied to the mines by the Minnesota Tax Commission has multiplied the state revenue from that source, as compared with even five years ago, nearly six-fold. One-half of the aggregate volume of public revenue collected within the State of Minnesota, both state and local, is expended upon the public schools. Our school enrollment of 450,000 exceeds the combined enrollment of Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire and Rhode Island; while our state university attendance of 4,500 is the fourth largest in America. Minnesota possesses the greatest permanent school and university fund and estate in the world; the $20,000,000 already yielded by our vast educational heritage of timber, iron and agricultural lands being only the minor fraction of a future income that may exceed $100,000,000.

Drainage.

The subject of drainage is more than ever a proper one for your consideration. The last two years have been marked by the greatest progress in this direction ever made in a similar period of the history of the state. In fact, because of the generous and wise policy of the last two legislatures more miles of state ditches have been constructed, more water has been removed from swamp lands, and more acres of land reclaimed than in all the previous years of our state history. The experience of the past convinces me that wise business policy would demand even a more generous policy in the future.

The total number of acres of state land benefited by the construction of state ditches during the past two years is 177,400, as shown by the report of the viewers in the several ditches, which report also shows that 163,000 acres of private lands were benefited. The total benefit to the state and private lands is $34,300.

Railway Taxes.

If possible a change should be made in the present law so far as it relates to the payment of railway taxes. The laws of the state now provide for the payment of aid to the graded schools, high schools, semi-graded schools and rural schools, to the extent of upwards of $600,000 annually, and further provide for these payments in October of each year. The payments are in advance of the appropriation on its way to the state treasury, and in consequence necessitate temporary loans and overdrafts thus creating a deficiency in the treasury. To bridge the period from October, when the school appropriations are payable, to the following March, when taxes are available, the treasurer under legislative authority, has been obliged to borrow funds to meet this emergency, and has been compelled to pay interest averaging over five (5) per cent annually for the past six years. During the year 1905-6, the amount borrowed was $1,715,683.08, upon which the state paid in interest $24,315.15. The next year the loan was $650,929.40 and the interest at 5½ per cent was $9,722.97. Last year the treasurer borrowed $910,139.22, the rate being seven (7) per cent, the interest amunt paid by the state being $7,074.27. This condition could be avoided altogether by amending the law and requiring corporation gross earning taxes to be paid semi-annually on or before September 1, and March 1, respectively.

Taxation of Telephone Companies.

Sections 1035-6-7, R. L. 1905, provide for a three per cent gross earnings tax on all telephone companies doing business in the state. The public examiner reports that with few exceptions the various telephone companies have been reporting for taxation purposes the earnings originating and terminating within the state, and have not reported earnings on interstate business. Action has been instituted against one of the companies neglecting to report interstate business, and the matter is now pending in the courts. The decision in the lower court was in favor of the state and the company appealed the case to the supreme court. In view of the ambiguous term of the statute, it would be best to repeal the present statute and pass a new law which will be specific in its terms and provide for a tax on all inter state business and the state share on all business, and which will provide the necessary penalties for failure to make returns of gross earnings.

Railway Regulation.

The maintenance of a maximum rate of two cents per mile for the transportation of passengers undoubtedly tends to equality of rates and perhaps lessens the discretion which the carriers formerly had to grant special rates either to a particular class of persons or upon particular occasions where it was expected or desired greatly increased travel would occur. In my judgment the arguments against the rates fixed by the legislature of 1907, are of little force as compared with those in favor of that law, but whatever may be said upon this subject there can be no question in the mind of any reasonable or fair minded person that the legigislative discretion upon this subject must be supreme if the state in truth does possess the power to regulate the business of railroad transportation. The carrier must be allowed fair remuneration for the services rendered by it, but when this is secured the authority to say whether or not such remuneration shall come equally from all the traveling public or whether or not special rates may be granted by means of mileage books, excursion rates or other special rates, is certainly vested in the sound discretion of the legislature.

Education.

The last two years have been marked by a continuation of actual progress in the schools of the state. There has been a slight lengthening of the school terms. Teachers' wages are higher. The proportional number of graduates from high schools, normal schools and colleges has increased. More schools than ever before have qualified for and received special state aid in their respective classes; and schools in general are better provided than ever with libraries and equipment generally.

Communications from many of the most experienced school superintendents indicate that the compulsory attendance law now upon the statute books is practically a dead letter, due very largely to the fact that school officers do not desire to risk neighborhood troubles by appointing truant officers. I would renew my previous recommendation that legislative provision be made for a non-resident officer to enforce our educational laws in the country districts. Poverty is not responsible to any great extent in keeping children from school, people of means being largely among the worst offenders along this line. Certain it is that every child in the state should receive the benefits of our splendid educational system; and provisions should certainly be made to compel the attendance of children in the public schools.

Logs and Lumber.

The past year was eventful because of the unusual commercial and financial conditions which have obtained. The stringency of the money market, and the attendant business depression so far affected the lumber industry that the state timber board deemed it wise to have no stumpage sale during the past year. The law provides arbitrarily that there shall be but one general stumpage sale each year except in case of an emergency, and as the condtions did not justify this, no sale was held. The timber board has had less difficulty than formerly in the adjustment of settlements for voluntary or involuntary trespass. Because of the inexorable rule of the board which made no settlements except in strict accordance with the law, timber operators have found it cheaper to buy the timber in the regular way and pay for it accordingly. There have been some trespass cases, but they are gradually growing less, a condition much to be desired. The board finds that now and then the law works a hardship to those who have not intended to violate the law, and in such cases the board has been obliged to turn cases over to the attorney general to have the courts do that which the board itself cannot do, but which it would do if it were permitted to do under the law. It seems to me that a board comprising the Governor, State Auditor, Attorney General and State Treasurer could safely be trusted to safeguard the interests of the state, and therefore should have wider latitude and greater authority in settling controversies and making adjustments than is now possessed.

Insurance.

At the last session of the legislature our insurance laws were modified and readjusted to such an extent that we have now, in my judgment, one of the best insurance codes of any state in the union. Under these laws, the department of insurance has been able to accomplish much in the way of regulating and supervising the insurance business of the state in the interests of the insured, as well as to the ultimate interest of the insurance companies themselves. The insurance business is upon a sounder basis than at any other previous time in the history of our state, and the people who invest in insurance can now feel assured that their investment is a safe one. The department itself has made wonderful progress. In 1900, the fees collected by the insurance department amounted to $28,524.80. In 1904, the fees were not materially increased. Beginning with 1905 the fees collected were $36,679.53, in 1906, $52,822.73, in 1907, $52,042.93. During the eleven months up to December 1, 1908, the fees reached a total of $54,325.63, almost $2,000 more than in any eleven months in any previous year in the history of the department. The taxes collected by the department have also been materially increased.

State Game and Fish Commission.

The State Game and Fish Commission has, during the past two years, expended $156,430.15 for all purposes, including maintenance of the several fish hatcheries, gathering and distribution of fish spawn and fry, salaries and expense of game wardens and other employes, and a number of permanent improvements at fish hatcheries, including the construction of two dwelling houses, concrete and cement hatching house and ponds, a fish car with side track and car shed, the acquisition of lands for hatchery purposes, and other expenses, and has on hand December 1, 1908, in all funds, $32,718.18.

The distribution of fish fry for the two years 1907 and 1908, to the streams and lakes of the state has been 99,381,300 of all varieties propagated and distributed, including the several varieties of trout, pike, perch, bass and crappies. Practically all approved application for fry have been filled during 1908.

Labor Department.

Chapter 356, general laws of 1907, reorganized the Bureau of Labor and by reason of the enlarged force of factory inspectors the department has been enabled to extend its field of usefulness into many towns and cities, and to make two inspection visits annually to the larger industrial centers of the state.

A total number of 5,191 establishments, located in 239 cities and towns, were inspected. The total number of wage earners whose welfare was looked after, was 117,259. It was found necessary to issue 360 written orders for the safeguarding of machinery, for better ventilation and sanitary conditions, and for better fire protection.

The reports show a total of 1318 accidents in factories, workshops and mines for the year ending August 1, 1907, and 1,002 for the year ending August 1, 1908, a reduction of 316 or 24.3 per cent for the latter year. Of the total number for the two years, 153 were fatal.

I would suggest the passage of a law by this Legislature giving inspectors power to seal up ovens and utensils of bakeries when places are unclean, if not cleansed within a reasonable time after notification by inspector.

Conclusion.

Finally, gentlemen of the legislature, we live in and owe allegiance to one of the greatest commonwealths in the American Union, and we approach our respective duties at the period of the state's highest development and prosperity, and therefore at the period of the state's greatest legislative and executive responsibility and opportunity. Whatever may be our respective personal and political affiliations and ideas, our duties and our purposes, I am sure, are one: namely, the protection and advancement of the highest public interests of our commonwealth. Elected to our respective positions by the same people and to serve the one common cause, our mission here is one and the same, to give the best service there is in us to the state as a whole, as we have sworn to do under the guidance of our constitution. Whatever may appear to be our respective obligations to parties, classes and sections, these obligations are swallowed up and patriotically and religiously redeemed in the one duty of public service to the state of Minnesota. There is surely no obligation to party, class or section, paramount to our sworn obligation to the state as a whole, which includes all parties, classes and sections. When we have fulfilled our highest duty to the whole, we have met our obligations to each part; and, therefore, in our great co-operative mission, legislative on your part and executive on mine, there should be, and I have faith to believe there are, no differences or allurements of party, class or section to divert us from the great highway of public duty—the moral, educational, financial and industrial development of our commonwealth

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

MATTERS OF INTEREST IN THE GOPHER STATE.

Surveying the Minnesota River—Fixing Legal Age of Girls—Number of Hogs Slaughtered.

Drainage.

Crookston.—Engineers employed by the state drainage board and under the directions of George A. Ralph, state drainage engineer, will start out on a survey of the Minnesota river basis. They will continue work for some months, running it from the river's junction with the Mississippi at Mendota back to its rise in Big Stone lake.

The purpose of the survey is to arrive at the best method of preventing the annual floods which have been wiping out crops and doing other damage in the bottom lands along the river. The survey will show bench marks for low water and flood marks will give distances and make it possible to calculate the flow, the capacity of the channel, the area of the basin. Congress will eventually be as kdeot Congress will eventually be asked to provide a reservoir system to hold back water in the spring and release it when needed for navigation in the Mississippi.

Plans are also under consideration for straightening the river channel in some places. The legislature is expected to make some provision for improvements and to complete the survey.

The Minnesota River Improvement league has been organized to push this work, and members from the valley counties will do what they can in the legislature this winter to promote the work of controlling the river.

Age of Girls.

St. Paul.—Whether the laws of the state, which now fix eighteen years as the age at which girls attain their majority, should be changed so as to make the age twenty-one years, was one of the principal subjects under consideration yesterday at a meeting of the Minnesota Society for the Promotion of the Interests of Children of Public Concern at the capitol.

At present the law fixes eighteen as the age at which girls pass from the period designated by the lawyers as infancy. But for many purposes a girl is not considered a woman until she reaches the age of twenty-one years. She cannot exercise her limited franchise until she is twenty-one and she is counted a child by the law in reckoning the school appropriation fund of the state until she reaches that age.

Many Hogs.

South St. Paul.—The year 1908 was a banner one in the hog market at South St. Paul and the long looked for million mark was passed. This record is 250,000 greater than any previous year, the total number received during 1908 being 1,133,412.

While the hogs have been getting heavy the cattle have been going light, the latter having fallen off about 50,000 from 1907. The sales of cattle exceeded any other year by several thousand. The sheep receipts also showed a decrease, while the number of calves on hand during the year was the largest ever.

Taking the year as a whole it was very satisfactory to the local cattle men and they are much pleased with the results in view of the condition of business over the country in general.

Arrested.

Surrounded by every bulwark of secrecy United States Marshal H. A. Rider of Little Falls, Minn., arrived in St. Paul last evening with George T. Frankhauser, for whose capture a reward of $15,000 has been offered and who will stand before a United States commission in St. Paul today charged with holding up the Oriental Limited of the Great Northern railway at Rondo, Mont., in September, 1907, and robbing the United States mails of $50,000.

Minneapolis Assets.

According to figures received by City Comptroller Dan C. Brown from the county auditor the total assessed valuation of Minneapolis real and personal property is $175,912,389. Of this amount, $126,899,966 is in real property, while $49,012,423 is in personal property. The taxes for the coming year have been based upon these figures, the rates by wards ranging from 27.75 in the Fourth and Fifth wards to 29 in a majority of the wards.

Miscellaneous Notes.

St. Paul.—Officers of Minnesota national guard advocate home ranges for the different companies.

Minneapolis. — Election night in New York with its wild excitement is seen to advantage in one of the big scenes depicted in Owen Davis' melodramatic novelty, "The Prince of Swindlers," which comes to the Bijou, inneapolis, the week of January 10th.

Minneapolis.—If the Minneapolis contributors to the Chisholm fire relief want the earthquake sufferers in Italy to benefit by the surplus of the Chisholm fund, it will be done.

Lake City.—Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Walstrom of this city celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary. They have been residents of this city upwards of forty years.

Rochester.—Olmsted county, and, in fact, this part of the state is again face to face with the serious problem of the destruction of the fox and the wolf.

Waiting for His Little Airship.

The birds were flying south. Presently they espied a lone robin perched on a lofty limb.

"Come on," they cried, "and join the bunch."

But the robin perked his head on one side and shook it vigorously.

"What are you waiting for?" they cried.

"I'm waiting," replied the robin, "for one of these daffy little airship chapples to blow along and then meb-by I can sneak a ride."

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

As further inducement to settlement of the wheat-raising lands of Western Canada, the Canadian Government has increased the area that may be taken by a homesteader to 320 acres—160 free and 160 to be purchased at $3.00 per acre. These lands are in the grain-raising area, where mixed farming is also carried on with unqualified success. A railway will shortly be built to Hudson Bay, bringing the world's markets a thousand miles nearer these wheat-fields, where schools and churches are convenient, climate excellent, railways close to all settlements, and local markets good.

"It would take time to assimilate the revelations that a visit to the great empire lying to the North of us unfolded at every turn."—Correspondence of a National Editor, who visited Western Canada in August, 1908.

Lands may also be purchased from railway and land companies at low prices and on easy terms.

For pamphlets, maps and information as to low railway rates, apply to Superintendent of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or the authorized Canadian Government Agent:

The Red Lake Falls Gazette will fly its kite during the coming year with a 300 pound weight tied to its tail. Which will probably keep it within view of the common people.

For over a year the editor of this paper has been an advocate of the redistricting of Red Lake county. It is well known fact that the present commissioners districts are not in conformity with the laws either on a bassis of boundaries or of population. A large portion of the county is without legal representation on the county board and as a result the interests of that portion are not cared for as they should be. The present system places the entire county at the mercy of a few individuals and the people should not tolerate it. A re-districting of the county can be forced and there is every reason why it should be.

The Minnesota legistature convened in St. Paul this week and Governor Johnson handed in a message that was unusually long but contained a number of good recommendations. Among other things the governor suggests that a more rigid system of bank inspection be adopted. There is lots of mighty poor paper held in some banks as security for the depositor's money. Take for instance, a second mortgage on a piece of real estate. The bank examiner finds an abstract attached to a mortgage of this kind and the abstract may show that the land sold for three or four thousand dollars, or more, when as a matter of fact the land sold for half the amount shown in the abstract, or less. The legislature should place a law on the statute books providing a severe penalty for giving false figures in any conveyance of real estate. Placing bogus figures in a deed for the purpose of establishing a false loan value on real estate is simply fraudulent and should be punished as a crime.

Mary Was Spoiled.

A doctor in one of the West Philadelphia children's homes tells the story of a woman who came to him one day in a most perturbed state of mind. She had taken home her daughter of five years the week previous, after a stay of a year in the home, and found she had an elephant on her hands. "Oh, sir," she said to the doctor, "whatever can I do with Mary? You have made her far too grand for her own home. Why, the first day she was back she refused to be dressed in the morning till she had a bath; then she would eat no breakfast whatever because she wanted fruit and some 'serious food' first, and, last of all, she put a saucer of water at her place at the table and she dips her fingers in that every few minutes. Sure, doctor, I don't know what I'll do," and the woman passed out, shaking her head as if the problem was certainly too much for her.—Philadelphia Record.

The Poor Member.

"Brother Lastly," said the spokesman, "I have an unpleasant duty to perform. There is a report that you have said that one of the best and most worthy members of our congregation is unable to attend service often on account of not having good enough clothes. We have come to ask the name of that member. We don't know of any such person, and a report of that kind is likely to reflect upon us as a congregation that does not look after its poor but worthy members. Will you tell me who it is?"

Playing Goethe Three Ways.

"I made a bad break today."

"How was that?"

"There is a Chicago woman visiting Julia Dean, and while I was there she insisted upon talking about Gerty. Pretty soon I asked her if Gerty was her daughter. You should have seen her flare up! And then I somehow found out she meant Goaty."

"Who?"

"Oh, you know—the great German author."—Somerville Herald.

Marlin

For shooting the swift flying, heavily feathered ducks and geese the Marlin 12-gauge repeating shotgun has no superior. This gun is exceedingly strong in construction and yet is not heavy. It is bored to throw an excellent pattern with great penetration. The solid top keeps out the weather and the brush and twigs of the blind, and the side ejector prevents the empty shells from being a nuisance to the shooter. It's the best bad weather gun.

The Marlin 12-gauge is suited to all forms of bird and trap shooting, and for durability, strength and ease of action is unexcelled. Made for both black and smokeless powders and for heavy loads. Two separate extractors make sure work.

People Favor The Plan.

Last week the Pioneer published an editorial advocating that the county be re-districted in some way that will give the people a chance to be represented on the county board and be in conformity with the requirements of law. During the time since this editorial appeared we have been assured by a large number of people in this part of the country that they are heartily in favor of having the county re-districted, and also in favor of having it done as soon as possible.

At the present time the reservation territory south of the Red Lake district is attached to one district, while all the territory north of the same river is attached to another district. The law governing the establishment of these districts provides that "In counties divided into towns, such districts shall be bounded by town or ward lines, be composed of contiguous territory, and contain, as nearly as practicable, an equal population. Counties may be re-districted by the county board after each state or United States census."

At the present time there is practically all of the Eleven Towns and a whole lot more of the eastern part of the county that is not given sufficient consideration by the county board. The interests of this great territory is overshadowed by the interest of the two cities of Ret Lake Falls and Thief River Falls. The people of all the eastern part of the county should make their demand know in no uncertain terms and secure fair representation on the county board. If they should circulate petitions and have them signed by the residents of each township and present them jointly to the board they should accomplish the desired result. If the board should fail to act on these petitions then the people should get together, organize and secure good legal aid and force the board to redistrict the county. This latter measure we hardly think would be necessary, however, as it is probable that the people of either Red Lake Falls or Thief River Falls are not blind enough to their own interests to place any obstacles in the way and antagonize the people in the large territory requesting the action to be taken.

Eivind Gunstenson was in from Garnes yesterday and found time to make this office a pleasant call. He has our thanks for a dollar to pay another year's subscription in advance.

Stockholders Meeting.

Notice is hereby given that the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Clearwater Mercantile Co. will be held at Plummer on Monday, January 18th, 1909, commencing at 10 o'clock A. M., for the election of officers for the ensuing year and to transact such other business as may come before the meeting.

A. J. Hemstad, Secretary.

We want all your butter and eggs and will pay you more than the highest market price for them. Clearwater Mercantile Co.

Notice For Bids.

Sealed bids will be received up to January 20th, 1909 to clean out the ice house of the Clearwater Creamery and fill it with ice. About two more loads of sawdust is needed.

The board reserved the right to reject any or all bids. Address all communications to A. Mandt, Manager, Rhoda, Minn.

The Family Dog.

An Edinburgh clergyman says: "Every family should have a dog. It is like a perpetual baby. It betrays no secrets, never sulks, asks no troublesome questions, never gets into debt, never comes down late to breakfast and is always ready for a bit of fun."

One Secret.

Lawyer—I must know the whole truth before I can successfully defend you. Have you told me everything? Prisoner—Except where I hid the money. I want that for myself.

The Observing One.

Patron—How can you tell whether a couple are married or not? Hotel Keeper—If he orders two whole portions, they are not; if he orders one portion for two, they are.

A Parting Shot.

Group of Shoeblacks (in chorus)—Shine, sir; shine? Seedy Masher (irritably)—No, confound you all; no. One of Them—Cut the fringe off your trousers same time, sir.

Annual meeting of Telephone Company.

The first Annual Meeting of stockholders of the Clearwater Farmers' Telephone Company was held in this village on Tuesday and it was a most harmonious affair. Three directors were to retire on that date, in the persons of J. W. Lynch, Chas. G. Sall and J. A. Walker. They were all re-elected, however, for another term of three years. J. A. Walker was again chosen for secretary and Henry J. Enderle as tseasurer, so that there is absolutely no change in the officers of the company.

Various matters of interest to the the company and its stockholders came up for discussion and in most instances these matters were referred to the board of directors for action. Among other things the advisability of erecting new lines from Garnes to Malone and from Lillo to Wanke, came up and it is highly probable that the Malone line at least will shortly be put in as there is a lot of people up in Mayfield who will gladly take stock and put in phones.

J. C. Parker came over from Bemidji on Sunday and remained until Tuesday looking over the business of the S. P. K. Lumber, Cedar & Tie Co, Grunde Austad was down yesterday from Malone where he ably fills the office of postmaster and storekeaper and found time to make us a pleasant call.

Mrs. J. O. Sargent returned home to Crookston on Monday night after some time spent in taking care of her daughter, Mrs. C. W. Latta, who has been very ill but is now improving steadily.

W. A. Swanson and M. E. Hyland came in from Rhoda on Monday afternoon and remained until next day when they hauled a couple of good sized loads of merchandise. While in town Mr. Swanson found time to call and pay for another year's subscription for which he has our thanks.

The Board of Managers of the Clearwater Mercantile Co. had a meeting on Thursday to look over the volume of business done during the past year They found everything in fine shape and the volume of business done during the year very large. The annual meeting of stockholders will be held on Monday and the figures for the past year will be submitted and should prove most gratifying to the stockholders.

Mayfield Murmurs.

Willie Rodman is busy grinding feed at Malone now right along.

Arthur Grothe was at Plummer on Monday to do some necessary shopping.

School was started again in District No. 33 after a vacation of two weeks.

Sam Lovaas and family were the the guests of Sever Maaren on Sunday last.

Mr. and Mrs. Ole Dahle returned from Grafton, N. D., on last Friday and have again taken up their residence on the farm in Deer Park township.

Rev. H. Halvorson, of Thief River Falls, was here on Saturday last and held services in the schoolhouse of district 33 in the forenoon and at the home of Sam Lovaas in the evening. He will be here again on January 27th, and will hold services at the home of Steen S. Tweten. All are welcome to attend.

Sever Maaren was up in the northern part of the town on Saturday last and enjoyed a pleasant visit with the efficient storekeeper and post master, Grunde Austad. Mr. Austad is very busy nowadays waiting on his customers and is doing a fine business because he gives every one a fair and square deal all the time.

Kicked by His Horse.

On Tuesday evening Charley Olson, storekeeper at Rudell, drove in from home after a load of merchandise. When he was unhitching his team one of the horses kicked and struck him on the knee. He bent over to rub the limb with his hand when the horse kicked again and struck him in the head and cut an ugly gash. He hastened to Dr. Clark's office and it was found necessary to tate several stitches in the wound. Mr. Olson remained in town until next morning when he left for home feeling better than might have been expected. He might easily have been killed instead of sustaining a comparatively slight injury.

Drop Siding, Flooring or any kind of fine finished lumber can now be had at the S. P. K. Lumber, Cedar & Tie Co's mill yard in Plummer. You dont have to pay trust prices if you buy your lumber from this company.

Mrs. Theo. Garceau Died Tuesday Night.

After an illness of about eight weeks Mrs Theo Garceau died at the family home in Red Lake Falls on Tuesday night at about 11 o'clock. The cause of her death was some stomach trouble which the best medical aid in the country was powerless to remedy. The funeral is to be held at 10 o'clock this morning from St. Mary's church in Red Lake Falls, Rev. Fr. Ambrose officiating.

Mr. and Mrs. Garceau have been residents of Red Lake Falls since 1883 and were among the most highly respected citizens of that city. Mrs. Garceau was a true and devoted wife and mother and was beloved by all who knew her for many excellent qualities. Besides her husband she leaves a family of eight children and they have heartfelt sympathy of all who know them in their irreparable loss.

Creamery Meeting.

The Emardville Creamery Association had its annual meeting of stockholders here on Monday last and elected officers for the ensuing year as follows:

President, A. J. Hemstad; Vice-president, Oscar Anderson; Secretary and Treasurer, P. S. Medchill; Directors, Oscar Anderson, Johan Froiland, Olaf Tande, Anton Lee, A. J. Hemstad.

The annual report of the treasurer showed that the total receipts of the creamery for the year past amounted to some over $27,000 which was an increase of about 17 per cent over the preceding year. The Association is in fine shape and it is expected that the output for the coming year will show a much larger percentage of increase than did the past year.

Dr. A. J. Klimek who will visit our town on Monday Jan 18th, 1909, is a man of wide knowledge and charming personality. The Doctor has made a special study of all the diseases of the eyes and many other complications of Nature's mechanims.

He is a graduate of the celebrated Chalmer T. Prentice and very seldom does such talent as his visit towns of our size. His parlors at Hotels are usually full from early morning until night. A number of patients always being on hand early because of the Doctor's generous offer to thoroughly examine and diagnose the first twenty cases free every morning.

Dr. Klimek is making a tour of the state, visiting most of the smaller towns.

He brings a message of Good Cheer to all you sufferers. You who have been told "There's no use"; You who now feel the first twitching and jerking of the eye muscles, which means the first stage of St. Vitus Dance, you who are afflicted with the impediment of Stammering, with Headache, Kidney or Stomach Trouble; you who feel the eye strain incident to reading or working, SEE DR. KLIMEK! Out of his generosity he is willing to carefully examine and diagnose the first twenty cases every day, FREE OF CHARGE. This examination in his office practice costs $5.00. Let him tell you your afflictions and their proper treatment. You are under no obligations whatever even after his careful examination, if you do not wish to accept his treatment. Dont give up Hope, but by all means see the Doctor.

BRIEF NEWS NOTES FOR THE BUSY MAN

MOST IMPORTANT EVENTS OF THE PAST WEEK TOLD IN CONDENSED FORM.

ROUND ABOUT THE WORLD

Complete Review of Happenings of Greatest Interest from All Parts of the Globe—Latest Home and Foreign Items.

EARTHQUAKE NOTES.

More earthquake shocks were felt in several of the ruined Italian towns. At Messina 1,300 victims were buried in one huge grave. Relief finally reached the town of Villa San Giovanni.

Premier Giolitti, addressing the special session of the Italian chamber of deputies, thanked the world for the aid given. The United States gunboat Scorpion established a relief station at Messina. Additional funds were raised by benefits, etc., in New York, Chicago and other American cities.

The Italian chamber of deputies passed the government's relief measures, though methods in the quake districts were severly scored.

Seattle, Vancouver, Bellingham and other cities of the northwest were jarred by an earthquake.

PERSONAL.

Charles S. Cameron, president of the Tube City Railroad Company of Pittsburg, charged with conspiracy and misdemeanor in attempting to bribe former City Councilman William A. Martin in connection with the passage of an ordinance granting a franchise to the Tube City railroad, was found guilty as indicted.

George Aunger, the oldest member and president pro tem. of the city council at Ashtabula, O., was indicted for alleged solicitation of a bribe of $1,200.

Venezuelans residing in Paris gave a hearty welcome to Dr. Jose de Jesus Paul, special envoy from Venezuela, when he arrived there from Bordeaux.

Frederick Corby Pole, wanted in Montreal on a charge of grand larceny in the sum of $25,000, surrendered himself to the police in Cincinnati.

Fred Van Meter, aged 27 years, was sentenced at Gallipolis, O., to life imprisonment at hard labor for the murder of his wife.

James Treadwell, former millionaire and promoter of the Treadwell mines in Alaska, was adjudged bankrupt in San Francisco.

GENERAL NEWS.

Rev. John H. Carmichael, who in the little Methodist church at Rattle Run, Mich., killed Gideon Browning, the village carpenter, and then burned the body in the stove, committed suicide at Carthage, Ill., by cutting his throat with a pocket knife. He left a long wirtten confession in which he said Browning had hypotized him and attacked him with knives and that he killed him in self-defense.

More than 100 lives were snuffed out by an explosion in the mines of the Lick Branch colliery, near Bluefield, W. Va. Just two weeks before, 50 miners were killed in the same mines by a similar explosion.

Magistrate Moss of New York found S. S. Carvalho, Bradford Merrill and Edward S. Clark guilty of criminally libelling John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and technically committed them to the Tombs prison. They are officers of the company that publishes Hearst's New York American.

Beryl Benjamin Laska, a young attorney of Denver, was declared not guilty in Federal Judge Lewis' court of using the "hypnotic eye" for exercising powers of clairvoyancy to influence jurors to hand down verdicts favorable to his clients.

The Turkish government accepted the Austro-Hungarian offer of £2,500,000 Turkish ($10,800,000) indemnity for the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, thus removing every possibility of war.

Joseph Cross, alias Rogers, 38 years old, who has been in prison most of the time since he was 14 years old, committed suicide by hanging in his cell at Joliet, Ill.

Fire practically destroyed the Peekskill Military academy at Peekskill, N. Y., causing a loss of $75,000. The 150 students in the place escaped in safety.

The entire western coast of Mexico was shaken by an earthquake.

F. B. Signor of Oakland, Cal., was arrested on complaint of James H. Murray, a multi-millionaire banker, on charges of committing forgeries aggregating about $1,000,000. He confessed.

Bert M. Taylor, accused of assaulting his two sisters-in-law at Minden, Neb., causing the death of one, gave himself up at San Bernardino, Cal.

The total valuation of the estate of the late Marshall Field was placed at $83,459,032.38 in a report submitted to County Judge Rinaker at Chicago.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

Congressman Theodore E. Burton was elected United States senator by the Ohio legislature.

Weldon D. Heyburn was elected United States senator to succeed himself by the Idaho legislature.

A bill to extend the franking privilege to Mrs. Grover Cleveland, widow of the late president of the United States, was introduced by Senator Penrose of Pennsylvania.

United States Senator Brandegee of Connecticut was selected to succeed himself by the Republican caucus of the state assembly.

Declaring that the president had been actuated by motives of malice and revenge in attacking his course in connection with the Coos Bay (Ore.) land agent, Senator Tillman of South Carolina from his seat in the senate made reply to the accusations of the chief executive.

Secretary of State Root and Ambassador Bryce of Great Britain signed the "waterway" treaty for the settling of disputes between the United States and Canada.

After having made him the target all day for criticism, with here and there words of commendation, the house of representatives by a vote of 212 to 35 rebuked the president by tabling so much of his message as reflected on members of congress regarding the secret service detectives, and also declaring it to be the sense of the house hat they shall decline to consider any communication from any source which is not in its own judgment respectful.

Senator Culberson's resolution instructing the committee on the judiciary to report whether the president had authority to permit the absorption of the Tennessee Coal & Iron Company by the United States Steel corporation was adopted by the senate.

President Roosevelt made public the results of an investigation by secret service men, showing Senator Tillman's connection with an alleged "land grab."

By direction of President Roosevelt, secret service men shadowed Senator Tillman of South Carolina on the theory that he possibly was interested in an Oregon "land grab," and the result of that investigation is before the senate, which has not made it public.

---

At Litchfield, Ill., fire destroyed the department store of L. V. Cline & Co. and other buildings, causing a loss of $150,000.

Lorin Farr, pioneer of Utah, among the first converts to Mormonism, first mayor of Ogden, husband of seven wives and ancestor of 300 children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren, was drowned at Utah Hot Springs.

James York, a quarry worker, cut the throats of four of his children near Mankato, Minn., and then committed suicide by hanging himself.

Frank A. Vanderlip succeeded James Stillman as president of the National City bank, and F. L. Hine succeeded George F. Baker as president of the First National bank, both of New York.

John V. Duffy, confidential clerk to Martin J. Condon, president of the American Snuff Company, was arrested in New York charged with forging his employer's name to 12 checks aggregating $3,300.

About $1,000,000 which has laid unclaimed in Massachusetts savings banks for more than 30 years will be paid to the treasurer of the commonwealth, through a decision of the supreme judicial court.

Of 28 workmen in the mine owned by Joseph Leiter, 26 were killed by the explosion, according to official information given out at the mining office. All of the bodies were recovered Monday.

Gen. Stoessel, Rear Admiral Nebogatoff and several other of the officers of high rank now in the fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul, have applied for pardon or commutation of their sentences.

Mrs. Tomas Estrada Palma, widow of the former president of Cuba, has decided to return to Central Valley, Orange county, N. Y., with her children, there to spend the rest of her life.

After a lively discussion the International Association of Aeronauts, at its first session in London, by a vote of 38 to 13, decided in favor of the Swiss balloon, Helvetia, as the winner of the international balloon race for the James Gordon Bennett trophy in Germany last October.

The visit of the emperor of Korea, accompanied by Prince Ito, to Fusan, about 200 miles from the capital, has created the impression that Ito is endeavoring to smuggle the emperor aboard a warship and have him taken to Japan.

Michael Rucci, aged 12, delivered a sermon in an East side Catholic church, New York, taking for his text: "Behold, I bring you tidings of great joy." The child composed the entire sermon and was well received.

The Kansas supreme court affirmed the verdict and fine of the district court for Shawnee county against the International Harvester Company. The company must pay a fine of $12,600 on 42 counts, each count charging a violation of the Kansas anti-trust laws.

Kang Yu Wei, the well-known Chinese reformer, who was expelled from Pekin after the coup d'etat of 1898, declared that Yuan Shi Kai had been dismissed from his high position as member of the grand council of the Chinese empire because he was instrumental in the death of the late emperor.

TO TRY GEN. T. H. POOLE

WARFARE BETWEEN GOV. BURKE AND FORMER ADJT.-GEN. AT CRISIS.

Col. Peake Sworn in, and District Court Restraining From Interfering—Serious Charges Profferred Against Him.

Bismarck, N. D., Jan. 14.—Events in the warfare between Governor Burke and Gen. T. H. Poole, late adjutant general, retired, are fast coming to a head.

Poole is under military arrest and serious charges have been preferred against him.

Application was made to the supreme court yesterday afternoon by the governor, through Attorney-General Miller, asking for a writ of prohibition directed to Judge Winchester of the district court, directing him and his court not to interfere with further civil proceedings against officers of the militia while in the performance of their duties and requiring him to vacate the order already issued against Coloneal Peake restraining him from performing the duties of adjutant general, to which office he was commissioned and sworn in yesterday afternoon. The writ was granted.

The governor says he proposes to maintain his position as commander-in-chief of the guard without interference by the courts, if possible, though he is confident of winning out in either military or civil procedure.

Sold His Farm; Kills Himself.

Des Moines, Iowa, Jan. 14.—Ross Cecil, a wealthy farmer, shot his head off yesterday at his home in Knoxville, Iowa. He had just sold his farm, and in a fit of despondency he killed himself as he considered the deal unsatisfactory.

CALIFORNIA GOING AFTER JAPS.

Legislature To Pass Three Drastic Measures to Limit Activities.

Sacramento, Cal., Jan. 14.—The three anti-Japanese bills introduced in the assembly by Grover L. Johnson, of Sacramento and the one by A. M. Drew of Fresno, prohibiting aliens from holding land in the state, have attracted such wide interest that the 1,000 copies printed of each are already exhausted and there is a demand for more.

The Johnson bills are designed to prevent Japanese being directors of corporations; to segregate their children in the schools and to segregate all Japanese by defining the limits within which they must live. The two first named were introduced last session by Mr. Johnson and action upon them was suspended at the telegraphic request of President Roosevelt, pending diplomatic negotiations between the United States and Japan over the action of the San Francisco school board in excluding Japanese youths from public schools and assigning them to the institutions set aside for "Mongolians."

The Japanese claimed they were not Mongolians and Assemblyman Johnson introduced an amendment specifying "Japanese" in the law. It was this measure to whose enactment the president objected and it was killed.

ESCAPED FROM PRISON; IS FREE.

Man Arrested in Minot, N. D., Will Not Be Deported.

Lethbridge, Can., Jan. 14.—(Special)—Oscar Webb, the Minot, N. D., man who escaped from prison in that place and was discovered here, came before Judge Stuart yesterday in connection with the habeas corpus proceedings taken by his lawyer, C. F. Harris, to prevent his deportation.

The immigration department took proceedings to have him deported, as they considered he was an undesirable character. Judge Start ruled that a man convicted of selling liquor in a prohibition state could not be considered as having committed a crime of moral turpitude.

Escaping from prison is a crime of such character, but he had not been convicted of such an offence.

As a result of the decision Webb is a free man and can remain in Canada.

Phillips Held for Fraud.

Helena, Mont., Jan. 14.—It became known yesterday that the recent federal grand jury had indicted B. D. Phillips, a prominent and wealthy resident of this city on a conspiracy charge. He was released on bonds. It was alleged that he induced 100 persons to subscribe falsely to entry oaths whereby Phillips became possessed of 32,000 acres of government lands in northern Montana.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Wide Open Tax Valid.

St. Paul.—By deciding that the wide open tax amendment had been adopted the state supreme court opened the way for a number of new taxation bills, the most prominent of which is the tonnage tax, which will be strongly urged at the present session of the legislature. The decision also strengthens the position of the tax commission and removes the doubt as to the constitutionality of the mortgage registry tax.

This amendment which is now declared to have been adopted in November, 1906, was also voted on last fall and was lost. It grants to the legislature power to impose taxes of any sort so long as equality in the several classes is maintained, although the old exemptions of public institutions, church property and cemeteries are not disturbed.

Members of the legislature were pleased with the decision or otherwise, according to their nearness to the source of the iron ore supply. There was the greatest interest in the decision in the capitol. It opens the way for the special message the governor promised in his regular message.

The litigation over the amendments is peculiar and brought up questions never before determined in this state. Justice Elliott went into the subject to the extent of 17,000 words, discussing all previous cases bearing on this one.

The state canvassing board reported two years ago that the wide open tax amendment had been carried and the good roads amendment lost, but it was discovered that the numbers of the amendments on the ballots and on the tally sheets had been reversed, so that votes intended for the good roads amendment might have been credited to the tax amendment.

Accidentally Shot; Both Legs Frozen.

Barnesville.—While Henry Baxter of Baker was out hunting rabbits he saw what he supposed was a dog lying beside the railway track. He fired a shot and to his surprise a man got up where he supposed the dog lay. He could not speak a word of English and started down the track until he came to a farm house, went in and asked to stay for the night.

The farmer could not keep him, so he went to an old vacant shed and remained there for a day. During this time the cold spell raged.

Finding it too cold in the vacant house he went to another farmhouse and asked shelter, saying he was willing to stay in the barn. The farmer told him he would freeze and advised him to go to Barnesville. Instead of doing so he went back to the vacant house and remained there until neighbors found him Friday morning with both legs and other parts of his body badly frozen.

He was brought into town and there appears to be no hope for his recovery.

NEWS NOTES.

St. Paul.—The search for the six race horses stolen from the barns of W. G. Carling, one mile north of the state fair grounds, Thursday night, as yet has proved futile.

Minneapolis—The popular Irish singing comedian, Fiske O'Hara will be seen at the Bijou Opera House, Minneapolis, the week of January 17th, in the Irish romantic comedy drama, "Dion O'Dare," the same vehicle in which he made a pronounced hit last season.

Thief River Falls.—The city will in all probability continue its policy of municipal ownership of its public utilities by taking steps to secure immediate possession of the local telephone system now owned and operated by one of the largest telephone companies in the Northwest. It is found that this concern cannot give the long distance connection that the wholesale, banking, milling and other growing business interests demand.

St. Paul.—At a meeting of St. Paul Masons in the Auditorium $3,000 of the $125,000 still needed to complete the new Masonic Temple at Sixth street and Smith avenue, was raised by subscription. The estimated cost of the building, the foundations of which are already nearly finished, will be $109,000, exclusive of the heating, lighting plant or furnishings, and the lodges wish to get $412,000 with which to go on with the work.

St. Paul.—A Farmers' Short Course will be held at the School of Agriculture at St. Anthony Park for one month commencing Friday, Jan. 15th. The course consists of lectures, demonstrations and judging of stock and grains. The most practical subjects connected with farm life will be discussed. The course includes nearly all the farm subjects taught at the School of Agriculture. No entrance examination is given and there is no age limit. The expenses are low. It is hoped that there may be a large attendance of farmers.

St. Cloud.—The financial statement of Stearns county for the year 1909 was completed by County Auditor Crever, and shows that the county is in good condition. On January 1 there was $42,464.50 in the treasury, against $37,994.11 last year, a gain of $4,500. The total receipts during the year were $555,643.28 and the total disbursements $523,671.38.

Duluth.—Anton O. Lindens, postmaster at Big Fork, is $600 short in his accounts. The shortage was discovered by Inspector Monroe, and the postmaster will probably be removed.

TRY THIS FOR COLDS

Mix half ounce of Concentrated pine compound with two ounces of glycerine and a half pint of good whiskey; shake it well each time and use in doses of a teaspoonful to a tablespoonful every four hours.

These ingredients can be obtained from any good druggist who will prepare the mixture, or it can be mixed at home.

This is said to be the quickest cough and cold cure known to science, and at the same time it has a splendid tonic effect which benefits the whole system. The Concentrated pine is a special pine product refined for medical use and comes only in half ounce bottles, each enclosed in a round case, which is airtight, to retain all the original strength of the fluid, but be sure it is labeled "Concentrated."

BREAKS A COLD PROMPTLY

One ounce of Compound Syrup of Sarsaparilla, one ounce Toris Compound and one-half pint of good whiskey, mix and shake thoroughly each time and use in doses of a tablespoonful every four hours.

This if followed up will cure an acute cold in 24 hours. The ingredients can be gotten at any drug store.

Too Strong for Daddy.

It was raining outside, and little interrogative Irma was in one of her worst, or at least most trying, moods. Father, busily writing at his desk, had already reproved her several times for bothering him with useless questions.

"I say, pa, what—"

"Ask your mother."

"Honest, pa, this isn't a silly one this time."

"All right, this once. What is it?"

"Well, if the end of the world was to come, and the earth was destroyed while a man was up in an airship, where would he land when he came down?"—Everybody's.

Hon. Emil Kiang, Vienna, Aus., one of the world's greatest horsemen, has written to the manufacturers: "SPOHN'S DISTEMPER COMPOUND has become the standard remedy for distempers and throat diseases in the best stables of Europe. This medicine relieves Horses of great suffering and saves much money for the owner." 50c and $1 a bottle. All druggists. SPOHN MEDICAL CO., Goshen, Ind.

EASY FOR THE PAINTER.

Worthy Individual Had All the Details In His Mind.

A Chicago artist relates how a wealthy individual from Kansas City, with his wife and three sons and four daughters, once called upon him.

"Here we are!" exclaimed the head of the family. "Nearly a dozen of us, Mr. Painter. How much for a painting of the whole of us, discount for cash?"

"That will depend," answered the artist, hiding a smile with his hand, "upon the dimensions, style, etc."

"Oh, that's all fixed," responded the other breezily, with the air of a man who knows exactly what he wants. "We are to be dashed off in one piece as large as life, sitting on the lawn of my place just outside of little old K. C., singing 'Hail Columbia!'"—Harper's Weekly.

PATIENT SUFFERING.

Many Women Think They Are Doomed to Backache.

It is not right for women to be always ailing with backache, urinary ills, headache and other symptoms of kidney disease. There is a way to end these troubles quickly. Mrs. John H. Wrght, 606 East First St., Mitchell, S. D., says: "I suffered ten years with kidney complaint and a doctor told me I would never get more than temporary relief. A dragging pain and lameness in my back almost disabled me. Dizzy spells came and went and the kidney secretions were irregular. Doan's Kidney Pills rid me of these troubles and I feel better than for years past."

Girl's Head Encrusted—Feared Loss of All Her Hair—Baby Had Milk-Crust—Missionary's Wife Made

Two Perfect Cures by Cuticura.

"For several years my husband was a missionary in the Southwest. Every one in that high and dry atmosphere has more or less trouble with dandruff and my daughter's scalp became so encrusted with it that I was alarmed for fear she would lose all her hair. After trying various remedies, in desperation I bought a cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of Cuticura Ointment. They left the scalp beautifully clean and free from dandruff, and I am happy to say that the Cuticura Remedies were a complete success. I have also used successfully the Cuticura Remedies for so-called 'milk-crust' on baby's head Cuticura is a blessing. Mrs. J. A Darling, 310 Fifth St., Carthage, Ohio. Jan. 20, 1908."

Unique Visiting Card.

Mme. Johanna Gadski has brought to this country a fad that has become quite the rage in Germany, where it was introduced by no less a personage than the crown princess herself. It is a new form of visiting card, containing not only an elaborately engraved border, but a silhouette of the person it represents. The custom calls for a design appropriate to the holder's station. Thus, in Mme. Gardski's case the prima donna's head is framed in a border of laurel, while a lyre forms the base of the design. The card is not only unique but exceedingly pretty and effective.

Splendid.

"That's a fine looking maid you have now, dear."

"Yes, she's a darling, and she came to me highly recommended."

"Knows all about the latest styles of maiding, I suppose?"

"Oh, so far as knowing the duties of a maid goes, I don't suppose she knows a thing."

"But she came highly recommended, you said?"

"Yes, she broke the jaw of the last man who tried to kiss her."—Houston Post.

Warmth and Illumination Needed.

A philosophy without heart and a faith without intellect are abstractions from the true life and being of knowledge and faith. The man whom philosophy leaves cold, and the man whom real faith does not illumine, may be assured that the fault lies in themselves, not in knowledge and faith. The former is still an alien from philosophy, the latter an alien from faith. —Hegel.

Too Skeptical for Fairies.

The modern child believes in fairies probably no more than he does in Santa Claus. The next generation will most likely dispense with children's books altogether. And yet, it is said, and no doubt truly, that there was never an age when so much literature for children's use was written.—Ladies' Field.

ROSY AND PLUMP

Good Health from Right Food.

"It's not a new food to me," remarked a Va. man, in speaking of Grape-Nuts.

"About twelve months ago my wife was in very bad health, could not keep anything on her stomach. The Doctor recommended milk half water but it was not sufficiently nourishing.

"A friend of mine told me one day to try Grape-Nuts and cream. The result was really marvelous. My wife soon regained her usual strength and to-day is as rosy and plump as when a girl of sixteen.

"These are plain facts and nothing I could say in praise of Grape-Nuts would exaggerate in the least the value of this great food."

BY RIGHT OF LOVE

A Short Story of Rural Life

By MARY C. RINGWALT

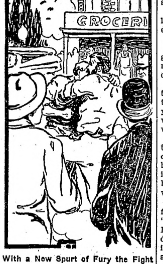
(Copyright, by Bobbs-Merrill Co.)

The doctor, John Norton, held the lines listlessly as he drove down the country road. The Smith baby was teething—he might have to lance her gums. Tommy Peterson, who had personally investigated the mystery of the forbidden fruit in the form of green apples, was on the road to recovery and new mischief. Even the judge no longer needed the ministrations of a doctor so much as those of a nurse. There were no critical cases to scatter his thoughts that swarmed about the anxiety of his own home.

His little mother was breaking down. It was all his fault, accused his morbid thoughts.

Norton's forehead puckered in a calculating twist. Although the drought had made money "tight" among his farming clientele he could manage to borrow a hundred or two to send her to the "shore" for the complete rest and change that would alone be her salvation—but there was his mother's indomitable will to be reckoned with! Her alert knowledge of his affairs prevented kindly deception and he knew that no power on earth could persuade her to spend a borrowed penny on herself.

The pucker deepened—he was searching for hidden possibilities among his uncollected, uncollectible bills. Then, even in that worried moment the doctor smiled. He had remembered Joe Riley's $300.



With a New Spurt of Fury the Fight Continued.

As the months had piled themselves up into years after Joe's operation, this promised bonanza had been the pet dream-castle built by the doctor and his mother in their twilight talks; the family joke of the saner breakfast hour. And yet only last week when the doctor had broached the subject to Joe anew there had seemed a definite purpose in the latter's eye as he begged Norton to wait until the first of the coming month. The first of September—why, that was to-day! Of course nothing would come of it, but his despair clutched at even a straw of hope, and flicking Molly B. with his whip he hastened toward the toll-gate, passing under its lifted white arm into Centerville, one of the little squat, one-story towns dotting Cloverdale county, over which the doctor's practice sprawled.

Old farmer White, his legs in faded blue overalls twisted about a keg of nails, was ornamenting the platform in front of Watson's as the doctor's buggy drew up.

"Hello, Pete!"

"Hello yourself, Doc!"

The doctor leaned out of the buggy, peeping in through the open door to a laughing group of men lolling over a counter.

"Say, Pete," he called, "ask Joe Riley to come out here a moment, will you? I want to speak to him."

"Sure!" was the ready answer, but instead of entering the store he shambled down the steps and approached the buggy, giving a low chuckle with the same shuffling quality as his walk. "Heard the news about him, Doc?" Pete puffed the question out slowly with rising rings of smoke from the pipe.

Norton shook his head.

"Had a windfall. Brother dead in Californy. Left Joe $2,000. Ain't that what you call luck?" The chuckle shuffled through his speech, punctuating it with dashes. "It weren't paid in till to-day, but Joe knew it was a-coming a week or more ago. He's celebrating now by treating the boys to drinks. I—" He stopped, suddenly conscious of the doctor's absent-minded gaze.

The doctor sat silent, a shining light in his eyes. He was not a praying man, but there had been crises in his professional life when his heart uplifted to the Supreme Mystery in words of praise unspoken by his shy lips. And now he felt that a power outside himself, above, beyond himself, had laid a divine gift in the outstretched hand of his necessity.

Riley had known of his legacy at their last meeting—that had been the meaning then of the definite purpose in his eye when he had asked the doctor to wait.

The laughter trailed from the shop to the sidewalk, and Joe Riley stalked pompously toward the buggy, the "boys" in his triumphant wake.

"Well, Doc," said Riley with boisterous joviality, "what is it to-day—tea oats, or a clothes-wringer?"

The doctor laughed. "I guess it's congratulations first, isn't it, Joe?"

"Pete's been leaking?" Riley playfully slapped the man's shoulder.

There followed a general exchange of bantering pleasantries, then in a little drift of silence the doctor said genially: "So this legacy was in your mind a week ago, Joe, when you asked me to wait to settle that little business affair of ours?"

Riley lifted one foot to the buggy step and bent over to tie a dragging shoe-string. "Yes, Doc, I had the legacy in mind all right."

Norton's smile held the radiance of sunshine after a storm. "The money couldn't have come in more handy, Joe. That little mother of mine is all worn out. Now I shall take your $300 and send her to the shore for as long a time as I can coax her to stay."

"You ain't a-frying your chicken before you've catched it, be you, Doc?"

"I—don't quite—understand?" The doctor's mind fumbled for the point of humor in Joe's joke.

"This here sleek, bobtailed fortune ain't no hack horse to haul a load of debts. She's to be ridden for sport—see?"

"Come, Joe," said the doctor quietly, "quit your fooling. I'm in dead earnest."

"So am I!"

Norton's eyes blazed. "Joe Riley, I give you fair warning—I'll put up with no nonsense! You'll pay me that $300 or I'll have the law on you!"

"And I the laugh on you, Doc Norton!" cried Joe, mimicking the doctor's tone. "Your bill was outlawed yesterday—I had that in mind, too, when I asked you to give me another week!"

For an instant the doctor sat motionless, then he threw the lines out of his hands and jumped from the buggy. Dashing off his coat and tossing it on the sidewalk, he cried: "The bill's outlawed, is it? By heaven, we'll settle it without the law then!"

The astonished Riley slunk back from Norton's threatening fist. "You're making a pretty good bluff, Doc," he laughed derisively, "but it don't cut any ice with me! You bookish men ain't got the ginger to fight, and—"

A blow from Norton's fist stung a crimson trail down Riley's left cheek. With a cry of rage Joe sprang upon his antagonist.

Out of hurrying clouds of dust up and down the pike men came running. "Something was doing" in front of Watson's—in the field the plow was left in the furrow; in the butcher shop the cleaver flung down upon the chopping-block!

There was no time for explanations, and the crowd was not one of fine discrimination, but for the past ten years Doc Norton had come into intimate touch with their lives and hearts, and they championed him to a man.

"Go it, Doc! Steady there! That's the boy, Doc!" were cries given in an ascending scale of enthusiasm.

Riley's great bulk was now a wall of self-defense, now a battering ram of danger against his foe. But Norton's staying power, his habit of ignoring fatigue, aches and pain in the performance of a physician's duties, had stored the strength of resistance in every fiber of his being, while his alertness, both of mind and body, gained in telling force when brought into prolonged play with Riley's lumbering clumsiness.

The blow upon Joe's left cheek no longer showed—his whole face was a purplish crimson, drops of sweat trickling from his forehead, his breath coming and going pantingly.

"Come, Joe—give in," cried Norton. "Let's call it a finish."

"Never!" yelled back Riley.

With a new spurt of fury the fight continued.

Suddenly Joe staggered, threw up his arms, reeling to one side. On the instant Norton dropped the attack, standing off guard. In a flash Joe swung down his arms, gave a lunge forward, a devilish gleam in his cunning eyes.

A moment more and Norton, tricked a second time, would have been tripped up and thrown to the ground, but in that moment an intuitive sense of danger made him spring aside before Riley's outstretched fingers could snatch at his ankles.

Riley, clutching at the air, lost his balance and pitched forward—as he struggled to regain his footing a hand of steel gripped the back of his shirt collar, a weight bore down upon his shoulders, forcing him firmly to the sidewalk, where he sprawled in the dust, Doc Norton's hold still on his collar.

A shout arose from lusty throats, and even Riley's cronies, who had so recently drank his whisky, now joined the crowd waving their hats when Joe Riley whimpered: "I'll settle."

But the doctor was oblivious to the ovation. One shining thought flooded his mind—that of his little mother her hand no longer hot and fluttering her face no longer haggard, nerve strained, but her cheeks flushed with health; the sunlit sparkle of the sea in her tired, lusterless eyes.

WHY NOT OWN LAND?

ONE OF THE BEST WAYS TO MAKE MONEY IS TO INVEST IN WESTERN CANADA.

"Deep down in the nature of every properly constituted man is the desire to own some land." A writer in the Iowa State Register thus tersely expresses a well-known truth. The question is where is the best land to be had at the lowest prices, and this the same writer points out in the same article. The fact is not disguised that the writer has a personal interest in the statement of his case, and there is no hidden meaning when he refers to Western Canada as presenting greater possibilities than any other part of the American Continent, to the man who is inclined to till the soil for a livelihood and possible competence. What interests one are the arguments advanced by this writer, and when fairly analyzed the conclusion is reached that no matter what personal interest the writer may have had, his reasons appear to have the quality of great soundness. The climatic conditions of Western Canada are fully as good as those of Minnesota, the Dakotas or Iowa, the productiveness of the soil is as great, the social conditions are on a parity, the laws are as well established and as carefully observed. In addition to these the price of land is much less, easier to secure. So, with these advantages, why shouldn't this—the offer of Western Canada—be embraced. The hundreds of thousands of settlers now there, whose homes were originally in the United States, appear to be—are satisfied. Once in awhile complaints are heard, but the Canadians have never spoken of the country as an Eldorado no matter what they may have thought. The writer happened to have at hand a few letters, written by former residents of the United States, from which one or two extracts are submitted. These go to prove that the writer in the Register has a good basis of fact in support of his statements regarding the excellency of the grain growing area of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. On the 29th of April of this year W. R. Conley, of Lougheed, Alberta, wrote a friend in Detroit. He says: "The weather has been just fine ever since I came here in March, and I believe one could find if he wanted to some small bunches of snow around the edge of the lake. There is a frost nearly every morning: at sunrise it begins to fade away, then those blue flowers open and look as fresh as if there had been no frost for a week. . . . There is no reason why this country should not become a garden of Eden; the wealth is in the ground and only needs a little encouragement from the government to induce capital in here. There is everything here to build with: good clay for brick; coal underneath, plenty of water in the spring lakes, and good springs coming out of the banks."

Rather Hard.

The messenger entered the palace with the dispatches.

"Brimstone and asphalt!" ejaculated Castro, as he read the yellow slip. "Holland threatens to spank us."

"Well, what of it, your excellency?" responded the secretary. "Other nations have threatened to do the same."

"Yes, but, confound it, this is a spanking that will hurt. The Dutch wear wooden shoes."

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

The Disturbing Telephone.

"The telephone has destroyed all the privacy of society," said the society girl. "It breaks in on everything. Nothing is sacred to it. You may be saying your prayers. The telephone. Or in the midst of your bath. The telephone. Or doing up your back hair, or, worst of all, a delightful man may be making love to you, when k-ling, k-ling, k-ling! The telephone breaks off the thread of his theme and he fails to resume it."

Answer This Question

When shown positive and reliable proof that a certain remedy had cured numerous cases of female ills, wouldn't any sensible woman conclude that the same remedy would also benefit her if suffering with the same trouble?

Here are two letters which prove the efficiency of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Red Banks, Miss.—"Words are inadequate to express what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I suffered from a female disease and weakness which the doctors said was caused by a fibroid tumor, and I commenced to think there was no help for me. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made me a well woman after all other means had failed. My friends are all asking what has helped me so much, and I gladly recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. Willie Edwards.

Hampstead, Maryland.—"Before taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was weak and nervous, and could not be on my feet half a day without suffering. The doctors told me I never would be well without an operation, but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done more for me than all the doctors, and I hope this valuable medicine may come into the hands of many more suffering women."—Mrs. Joseph H. Dandy.

We will pay a handsome reward to any person who will prove to us that these letters are not genuine and truthful—or that either of these women were paid in any way for their testimonials, or that the letters are published without their permission, or that the original letter from each did not come to us entirely unsolicited.

What more proof can any one ask?

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

SILENT CRANES.

A Nature Story by One of the Mount Taurus Climbers.

The mountaineer glanced complacently at his hard calves.

"We climbers," he said, "up there on the white heights see lots of things worth seeing. I tell you we could if we wanted to outdo the nature fakirs without deviating from the truth. For instance, take the Mount Taurus cranes. Do you know the cranes of Mount Taurus?

"Well, these birds are great chatterers. They chatter, chatter, chatter, as they fly. Hanged if they're not worse than women! Up on the heights the eagles lie in wait for them, hidden behind crags or ice blocks. They don't have to show themselves at all. Their ears, not their eyes, tell them of the cranes' approach, and, swooping down on those bundles of feathers and noise, they take home a mess of crane for dinner.

"With their chatter and babble and gossip the cranes of Mount Taurus give themselves away in that still air to the eagles, and in all eagle households crane is the staple dish.

"But the old cranes fly without a sound—never a word out of them as they sail and wheel in the blue air. That seems against nature, and it is against nature. The old cranes to restrain their innate love of talk fly with large stones in their mouths.

"Shoot one of these crafty and silent birds and you will find his beak tightly closed upon a large stone."—Exchange.

The Negro and the Watermelon.

A negro bought a watermelon for 50 cents and sold it a few minutes later for the same price. The purchaser changed his mind and sold it back to the negro for 40 cents. Later the negro sold it for 60 cents. How much profit did he make?—New York World.

Saves Him.

"How did Sniggsley ever get his reputation for the possession of great wisdom?"

"His wife talks so much that he never gets a chance to expose his ignorance."—Chicago Record-Herald.

A MICROSCOPE.

How It Opens Up the Wonders of the World of Nature.

If you want to keep your boy out of mischief, give him a microscope, not one of the elaborate, intricate, expensive affairs that the bacteriologists use when hunting for germs, but a common one with two or three lenses that revolve on a pivot and fold into a cover which protects them from injury when carried in the pocket.

There is no better way of interesting the boy in the wonders of the natural world than this simple contrivance, which opens to his eyes visions of a universe of which he knew nothing. Seen through the microscope, the most insignificant flower becomes a thing of wonderful beauty. The interior of a nasturtium is a fairy cavern, showing a dozen different tints and hues of color, with dainty white stalactites and stalagmites almost touching each other midway between floor and roof.

He will find monsters, too, for the head of an ant seen through a microscope is a terrible object, and he cannot help thinking what an awful aspect such a creature would present if it were as big as a horse. He has heard about the creatures that are to be found in water from a stagnant pool. He will find them for himself and show them to other boys, and all his crowd will become interested and bring in things to look at and wonder about. He may not develop into a Darwin, but if he has any faculty of observation at all it will be sharpened by what he sees, and he will learn that there is more in nature than what we discern on the surface.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Knew His Rights.

"I fine you," said the police justice. "$30 and costs."

"Y'r honor," protested Tuffold Knutt, who had been hauled up for vagrancy, "all the prop'ty I've got in the world is a plugged nickel an' me clo'es, an' they hain't wuth more'n about two bits. That fine's onreasonable. It's confistication, an' it won't never stand the test o' the fed'ral courts. I shall take an appeal, y'r honor!"—Chicago Tribune.

Creamery Directors Met.

The Board of Directors of the Emardville Creamery Association had their first meeting for this year and the session was quite a busy one. All the new officers qualified and P. S. Medchill was chosen for Manager during the coming year.

The matter of hiring a buttermaker for the coming year came up and work of the past year was reviewed to some extent and was found to be very satisfactory. This being the case the board was unanimously of the opinion that the present buttermaker, Lars Haslerud, should be re-engaged and Mr. Haslerud was accordingly hired for 1909.

A resolution was passed to the effect that hereafter butter sold for local consumption should be sold at the same price that the butter was worth net to the association at the depot here in Plummer. This means that any person wishing to purchase butter at the creamery may do so by paying the same price as the association receives in New York less transporation and commission charges. The difference will be about 2¼ to 2¾ cents per pound and the price will vary as the market rises and falls.

The Directors of the Clearwater Creamery at Lillo also had a meeting on Wednesday at Lillo. The officers for the ensuing year qualified as follows: President, J. W. Lynch; Vice-president, O. L. Bendickson; Secretary, Ida M. Lillo; Treasurer, Mrs. Con Short; Directors, A. M. Mandt, G. T. Heggar, C. Thomson, Axel Burman, Ole Legvold. A. M. Mandt was duly installed as manager.

The contracts for cleaning out and filling the ice house and repairing the well were let to Ole Legvold, and G. A. Hovland was hired as buttermaker for two months. They expect the creamery will begin operations for this season about February 1st.

Knut Steen and Anton Lee drove over to Red Lake Falls on Wednesday to look after some business at the courthouse.

Knut Anderson took a couple of his neighbors along and went to Crookston on Monday afternoon to make final proof on his fine homestead in Mayfield township.

Miss Nellie Sondell was in from northern Mayfield township on Sunday last. She reports that her brother Richard, is now recovering nicely from a siege of typhoid fever.

Olaf Tande and Ingvald Husby came in from Garnes on Saturday night last to attend the meeting of the M. W. A. Their presence was necessary to initiate a couple of new members.

The city council of Thief River Falls revoked the saloon license of Parkhurst & Warren, soloonkeepers of that city, on Wednesday. This action was taken because of the firm violating the law regarding closing their saloon at 11 o'clock at night.

Charlie Robbecke, the Thief River Falls hotel man, is laid up with a sprained wrist which he sustained by slipping and falling while closing the door of his hotel, the Ogahmah, last week. He slipping on a piece of ice and fell with his whole weight on the hand.

Charlie Wilson, of Mayfield, who is in St. Joseph's hospital for medical treatment, is reported as recovering nicely. When he left here many of his friends feared more serious results and they will be well pleased to learn that he is in good spirits and improving every day.

The monthly pay roll for the local creamery was ready yesterday but the checks will not be issued until Monday because of lack of the necessary blank checks bearing the name of the Association. Treasurer Medchill informs us that the checks will be out on Monday.

The Plummer school opened on Monday last after the holiday vacation with Miss Irene Caldwell and Miss Emma Wichterman as teachers. The attendance during this term will probably be the largest in the history of the school as a number of pupils from the country have moved in to attend.

Albert Wansted had a pretty close call on Tuesday afternoon. He and Henry Nelson were putting iron rods in the Johnson & Norby ice house and Nelson was driving a rod through with a sledge. The sledge handle broke off close to the head and the flying head hit Wansted in the face causing a somewhat painful cut and bruise under one eye. Albert is mighty glad the injury is no worse.

Sunny Brook John Broke leg.

On Wednesday morning John Kotschevar, familiarly known as Sunny Brook John, had the misfortune to sustain a quite serious injury which happened in a remarkably simple manner. He was engaged in doing the usual morning work around his place of business and had occasion to step out through the back door when he slipped and fell. He dislocated his ankle and broke a bone in his leg just above the ankle. He was carried to his room and Dr. Clark was called to set the ankle and the broken bone and now John is resting quite easy but will probably be confined to his bed for some weeks.

Mr. Kotschevar has had quite a run of bad luck during the past few months. Last fall his barn on the farm was destroyed by a windstorm and, being in an unfinished condition, he had no insurance on it. It is hoped by his many friends that this accident will break the hoodoo and that he will will pull through speedily and in good shape.

Creamery Statement.

Mayfield Murmurs.

News is scace this week again.

Carl Magnall made a trip to Plummer on Monday with the cream.

Iver Twedt was in Plummer on Wednesday to do some necessary shopping.

The weather was so cold during the last week that it took us about all our time to cut fire wood for three stoves.

Knut Anderson, Louis Anderson, and Martin Hoaas returned home from Crookston on Wednesday after making proof on Knut's claim.

Drop Siding, Flooring or any kind of fine finished lumber can now be had at the S. P. K. Lumber, Cedar & Tie Co's mill yard in Plummer. You dont have to pay trust prices if you buy your lumber from this company.

Talk up the redistricting of the county with your neighbors and keep at it. Petitions are now being circulated asking the county board to take action along these lines and are being signed by almost every one. Show the board that you mean business and you will get what you want.

The Andromeda Nebula.

One of the most astonishing objects in the heavens, especially when photographed, is the great nebula in the constellation Andromeda, which is visible as a misty speck to the naked eye. It has long puzzled astronomers, because while its structure—a series of vast rings surrounding a central mass—suggests a gaseous constitution, its spectrum is continuous, resembling that of the sun. It has been suggested that it may be composed of stars constituting a universe external to ours. Recent studies of its parallax, however, indicate that it is nearer to us than some of the well known stars, such as Capella, and Mr. J. Ellard Gore, the English astronomer, points out that if the Andromeda nebula were assumed to be an external universe, having a diameter comparable with that of the Milky way, its mass would be forty million million million times the mass of the sun. This is regarded as incredible and so may be taken as an additional argument in favor of the view that this nebula is a member of our system.—Youth's Companion.

Businesslike England.

The English are not a revengeful people. They forget everything after a fight in their eagerness to trade with their late enemy. It is not so much the spirit of forgiveness of sins which prompts them as the spirit of pushing trade. That is the central impulse in their being.—Dublin Irish Homestead.

Clearwater Merc. Co. Held Annual Meeting.

The Annual meeting of stockholders of the Clearwater Mercantile Company was held here on Monday last and officers elected for the ensuing year as follows:

President, P. S. Medchill; Treasurer, S. A. Lochen; For directors, A. J. Hemstad, Oscar Anderson, G. J. Hagen. The directors will hold a meeting on Monday next at which time they will appoint the secretary for this year.

A review of the past year's business showed that the company had done a fine business, having sold merchandise to the amount of about $12,000. They found net earnings sufficient to declar a substantial dividend on the stock but decided to put all earnings into the business again. This company is doing well and deserves all its prosperity.

The Red Lake Pine.

The Minneapolis Journal yesterday published the following dispatch from Washington: As a result of a conference between Representative Steenerson and officials of the Indian office and forest service, it is probable that an agreement will be reached in a few days on a plan for the disposal of pine timber on the diminishing Red Lake reservation. Officere of the forest and Indsan office are anxious to preserve this timber, which is practically the only solid body of white pine left in Minnesota and to sell only the mature timber and otherwise administer the forest in accordance with the present conservation policy of the goverment.

The plan proposed is to have the mature timber logged by the Indians and sold for their benefit. It is said under this plan the forest will be preserved, and will propuce steady revenue for the Indians for years to come. Although Mr. Steenerson has not given his final approval, the preservation and income features of the proposd plan appeal to him as the best thing for the Indians and the settlers of the Red River Valley. Representative Steenerson has had a conference with members of the subcommittee on rivers and harbors in charge of surveys, and has urged that provision be made in the emergency bill, soon to be reported, for surveys with a view to the improvement of the Red Lake river, Warroad harbor, and the harbor of refuge at Zippla. He hopes that all these projects will be included in the bill.

Cut Heads.

The Liverpool Post has been making observations with regard to the "cut heads" which are treated at the hospitals between 12 and 2 a. m. The Post says that the house surgeons have noticed a curious difference in the sexes on different nights. On Saturday nights the subjects are mostly men who have received their wages, redeemed their clothes from pawn and drunk enough to lead to a brawl. Monday night, however, is "ladies' night." The men have gone to work, and the wives have taken their husbands' best and only suit to the pawnshop, and then it is their turn to drink the proceeds and cut one another's heads. The usual answer to the question "Who did it?" is, "Another lady wot lives in the same 'ouse."

Married Paupers and Divorce.

"An odd thing about married paupers is that they like to live separate," said a single pauper.

"You know how almshouses are arranged. There's a men's ward, a women's ward and a mixed or married ward. Well, the mixed ward is always nearly empty. Not that we lack married paupers. Oh, no. But the husbands prefer to bachelor it among the men and the wives to old maid it among the women. The older our married paupers get the more vehement is their insistence on separate living.

"'She's allus a-naggin',' the octogenarian will growl.

"'Nobody can't sleep o' nights with sech snorin' as hisn,' sniffs the septuagenarian female.

"And so they separate—to all intents divorced."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

A Great Financier.

A man who occupied a little back room in a poor quarter of the east end of London was evicted for nonpayment of rent. He had nothing but a valise and a few clothes, and while they were throwing him and his belongings out of the house a bulky manuscript fell out of his pocket. Nobody noticed it at the time, but after he had gathered his clothes and taken his departure one of the bystanders saw the big roll of paper, picked it up and on opening it was surprised and amused to find it contained an elaborate scheme for refunding the national debt of the British empire.

An Angry Elephant.

A sentinel in the menagerie at Paris has had a curious experience with one of the largest elephants. The sentinel was very conscientious and always requested the spectators not to give the animals anything to eat, which seemed to displease the elephant in question to such an extent that he several times sprinkled the sentry's head with water from his trunk. One day a bystander offered this particular elephant a large cake. The sentinel interfered, as usual, and the elephant promptly discharged in his face a violent stream of water. A general laugh ensued, but the sentinel, having calmly wiped his face, stood on one side and continued as watchful as before. Soon afterward he found it necessary to repeat his admonition, but no sooner was this uttered than the elephant laid hold of his musket, twirled it round his trunk, trod it under his feet and did not restore it until he had twisted it into nearly the form of a corkscrew. Then he gave a snort at the discomfited sentinel, as if to say, "Now I hope you'll mind your own business!"

A Neighing Cock.

Camden says the Thames was once called the Cockney, and therefore a cockney means simply one who lives on the banks of the Thames. Wedgwood says a cockney, or cockerney, is one pampered by city indulgence, in contradistinction to rustics hardened by outdoor work. There is, however, a legend, almost too good to be true—namely, that a Londoner who had never before slept out of sound of Bow Bells had occasion to go into the country and was detained all night. He was much disturbed by the lowing of the cattle, the grunting of the pigs and other sounds of country life, which he could not understand, and in particular he was frightened by the crowing of the cock. In the morning, in response to the farmer's inquiries, he said the sound of the wild beasts had kept him awake. Just at that moment the cock crowed again, and the Londoner said: "That's the one! He's been neighing like that for hours!" Since then Londoners have been called cockneighs or cockneys.

The Python.

Contrary to general belief, the python or boa constrictor rarely attacks people and is looked upon very differently by the people from the hamadryad and cobra. The python will take up his abode in a neighborhood and will not disturb anything except the henroosts. These he disturbs very much, as he has a great fondness for chickens; also for a stray dog or small goat. I know of one case, however, in a floating house where a python attacked a woman and, contrary to the preconceived idea, did not crush her in his folds, but attempted to swallow her, commencing with one of her feet. When she was rescued her foot and ankle were badly lacerated by the snake's teeth. The Chinese kill the python to make medicine from the liver, which has a high repute among them. They also use the dried skin for medicine. Any Chinese drug shop in Siam will have a number of python skins for sale.—Medical Journal.

Woman the Tougher Sex.

Although men, as they run, are perhaps muscularly stronger than women, their inability to withstand the elements and their reliance upon clothes place them considerably below the so called weaker sex in the matter of unclothed toughness. Women wear clothes for ornament. Men use them as protective covering. A group of men marooned clotheless on an island in the temperate zone might be expected to die off in a month from drafts and colds and rheumatism. The health of women similarly placed would suffer little from the enforced exposure. The fact appears to be, therefore, that in everything but muscle—in vitality, ruggedness, character, disposition, brain power, etc.—woman is the tougher, not the weaker, sex.—Kansas City Journal.

A Xantippe Outwitted.

An Englishman of Lymington had the misfortune to live in a continuous quarrel with his wife, who was a modern Xantippe and threatened in case she survived him to dance over his grave. It was her lot to outlive him, but it was not so easy to carry out her threat. The husband had the precaution to make an injunction in his will requiring his body to be buried in the sea near his residence and without ceremony. The injunction was complied with.

Showing Him How.

"You young scoundrel," said the father, seizing his disobedient son by the hair, "I'll show you how to treat your mother!"

And he gave him several bangs on the ears and then shook him until his hair began to fall out.

Youthful Assurance.

"When I was your age," said the stern parent, "I was accumulating money of my own."

"Yes," answered the graceless youth, "but don't you think the public was easier then than it is now?"—Washington Star.

Lambert of Emporia, familiar throughout Kansas as attorney and politician, was burned to death. Fifteen persons, a number of them well known in the state, were injured. It is likely all will recover.

WENT BACK ON HIS SONG.

Exasperated Composer Glad to Prove Words Were False.

George Christie, nephew of the noted minstrel man, and himself a well known composer, says that he never was sorry but once that he helped write a song.

When Bert Fitzgibbon came to him with the lyric of a song called "You Can't Stop Your Heart from Beating" young Christie most enthusiastically set to work to put music to it, but now he's sorry. It happened this way —Christie occupied the adjoining room to a newly married couple who were very much in love.

The husband had learned Christie's song and all day long he sang it to his bride. In the morning before breakfast his accordion plaited tenor voice warbled "You Can't Stop Your Heart from Beating for the Girl You Love." After lunch it was the same and as a good night solo he rendered it.

The last straw was added to the camel's back when the bride learned the song and the love-struck couple sang the song in barber shop harmony. This was too much for Christie and he left the hotel, sorry that he had ever written the song.

Passing a neighboring drug store, an idea struck him, and he entered and purchased a bottle of carbolic acid. Wrapping it up in a neat package he presented it through the bellboy to the honeymooners with a note that simply read:

"This will stop your heart from beating. Use it!"

CAUGHT.

"I'll give you a penny if you can spell fish."

"C-o-d."

"That ain't fish."

"What is it, then?"

Mice on the Pillow.

"I'm not so much afraid of mice as some women," said she, "but I don't like them in my hair. The other night I finished a biscuit I was eating after I went to bed and naturally left some crumbs about, not meaning to, never thinking of mice.

"Well, about the middle of the night I heard scampering, and there were the mice all over my hair, trying to get at those crumbs.

"I tell you, I gave one shriek, sprang up, lighted all the gas in the room and sat up the rest of the night watching that pillow."

Wagner Fooled the Critics.

Here is a story of Wagner's visit to London in 1855: After the first Philharmonic concert the critics reproached him for conducting a Beethoven symphony without the score. At the second concert, to satisfy his audience, Wagner had a "partition" on his desk, which he frequently consulted. The critics declared the improvement was marked. The score, however, was Rossini's "Barbier de Seville."

CATARRH IN HEAD.

Pe-ru-na—Pe-ru-na.

MR. WM. A. PRESSER.

MR. WILLIAM A. PRESSER, 1722 Third Ave., Moline, Ill., writes:

"I have been suffering from catarrh in the head for the past two months and tried innumerable so-called remedies without avail. No one knows how I have suffered not only from the disease itself, but from mortification when in company of friends or strangers.

"I have used two bottles of your medicine for a short time only, and it effected a complete medical cure, and what is better yet, the disease has not returned.

"I can most emphatically recommend Peruna to all sufferers from this disease."

Read This Experience.

Mr. A. Thompson, Box 65, R. R. 1, Martel, Ohio, writes: "When I began your treatment my eyes were inflamed, nose was stopped up half of the time, and was sore and scabby. I could not rest at night on account of continual hawking and spitting.

"I had tried several remedies and was about to give up, but thought I would try Peruna.

"After I had taken about one-third of a bottle I noticed a difference. I am now completely cured, after suffering with catarrh for eighteen years.

"I think if those who are afflicted with catarrh would try Peruna they would never regret it."

Peruna is manufactured by the Peruna Drug Mfg. Co., Columbus, Ohio.

MINNESOTANS DINE

NOTABLE GATHERING IN ANNUAL CONCLAVE OF SOCIETY IN GOTHAM.

Speeches at Banquet Board Depict Early History of North Star State—T. E. Byrnes Is President.

New York, Jan. 21.—Once again those who have pleased to exile themselves from Minnesota and who have taken up their residence in the old New York, gathered around the festal board in the Waldorf Astoria last night in annual conclave.

For the third successive year, Geo. A. Brackett, the Minneapolis pioneer, was present at the banquet. Seated with Mr. Brackett at a central table in the Astor gallery where the dinner was served were A. B. Stickney, formerly president of the Chicago Great Western railway, Ansel Oppenheim of the same railway and Samuel Hill, son of James J. Hill.

At the guest table were E. H. Ozmun, consul general at Constantinople; Fred C. Stevens, congressman from St. Paul; C. A. Severance, law partner of Frank B. Kellogg, of the capital city; Timothy E. Byrnes, first vice president of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad; George Partridge of Minneapolis, Arthur MacMullin and Eugene A. Hay, president of the society and former member of the state legislature.

Congressman Stevens was the first to be called on. He prefaced his remarks by saying that he would have to be circumspect for he nor anyone else could not tell what sort of a report the secret service may make as to his conduct on it tomorrow.

Timothy E. Byrnes, who was the next speaker, spoke of the pioneer days of Minnesota when he arrived in St. Paul in 1862 at the age of 8. He said that he and his parents arrived on the St. Paul levée on the day that the Fifth Minnesota was embarking for the seat of war, under the leadership of Colonel Hubbard. Minnesota, he said, was at that time the youngest of the states, but that it had been the first to offer troops to President Lincoln to quell the rebellion. Mr. Byrnes also touchingly recited the gallantry of the First Minnesota that had already gone to the front.

Consul Ozmun, of Constantinople, who was born in Minnesota, told of conditions in the near East attending the revolution in Turkey. He said it was the most remarkable revolution in all history because it came so unexpectedly, like a burst of sunshine through a rift in a cloudy sky.

The following were elected officers for the ensuing year: President, Timothy E. Byrnes; vice presidents, John Henry Hammond, F. W. Cutcheon, Conde Hamlin, A. B. Stickney; secretary, H. G. Ingersoll, and treasurer, W. B. Richards.

REVENGE ON SNAKE BY LAW.

Bounty Bill Due to Rattler's Bite Which Cost Candidate Office.

Des Moines, Iowa, Jan. 21.—Senator Robert Quigley yesterday introduced a bill placing a bounty of 15 cents on the head of every rattlesnake killed in Iowa. The bill follows closely upon the serious illness of former Senator Byron Newberry, whose poisoning by the bite of a rattlesnake last summer made it impossible for him to take an active part in the fall campaign, thus causing his defeat.

To Investigate Minnesota Swamps.

Washington, Jan. 21.—Attorney General George T. Simpson and Auditor S. G. Iverson of Minnesota, reached Washington yesterday to take up with the secretary of the interior the question of ownership of 19,000 acres of swamp land which have been in dispute for several years. The state officials had conferences yesterday afternoon with the attorney general and with Senators Clapp and Nelson. A hearing will be had this morning before Secretary Garfield.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Failed to Return Indictment.

Red Wing.—William Hellerud, who was accused of the murder of David Rogers, following a quarrel in a saloon at Cannon Falls, Nov. 14 last, is a free man. The grand jury failed to return an indictment against him, there being insufficient evidence to convict. Judge Williston ordered his immediate release and the return of the $500 cash bond which he furnished. He left for his home at Turtle Lake.

The grand jury completed its work and returned three indictments. William Noble, charged with grand larceny in the first degree, entered a plea of guilty and was sentenced to six years at hard labor in the state prison at Stillwater. In September he broke into the farmhouse of Mrs. Josephine Schlunt at Florence and stole jewelry valued at $47, and currency to the value of $77. He at one time resided at Port Huron, Mich.

Horace McCarty, charged with grand larceny in the second degree, is accused of breaking into a dwelling house in Belle Creek and stealing $55 in cash. He entered a plea of not guilty and stated that he was ready to stand trial by jury. McCarty is out on bail.

Smallpox Victim in Court.

Rochester.—In justice court, when a civil case was on trial before Judge Theodore Schact, some little excitement was created by the discovery that the complaining witness was a victim of smallpox.

The plaintiff was on the stand and was being examined by the attorney for the complainant, when one of the attorneys in the case cried, "For heaven's sake, don't let this case proceed until the witness is examined," and upon investigation it was found that the attorney meant a medical examination. A doctor was called and at once pronounced the plaintiff in the case a smallpox victim, and steps were immediately taken to assure immunity from the disease for those present at the trial, as well as to properly care for the patient.

The victim in the case smilingly stated that he was well satisfied with the outcome.

Charge False Pretenses.

Bemidji.—Charles Schaffer, charged with securing money under false pretenses on certified checks for a total of $9,000, was taken this morning from the Beltrami county jail, which is the official jail of Koochiching county, to Brainerd by Sheriff McIntosh of International Falls, in order, it was said, that Schaffer might enter a plea of guilty before Judge McClenahan of the district court. Schaffer was in Crookston when he found a package of twelve certificates of deposits amounting to $9,000, drawn in favor of Nels Erickson, who lives near that city. Schaefer then went to Blackduck, where, it is alleged, secured small amounts of money from two saloon keepers, Joe Bray and Henry Dahlstul, by leaving certificates as collateral, and at Northome obtained $35 from Matt Jones by depositing a $1,000 certificate.

South Shore to Extend Line.

Duluth.—It is reported here that the Duluth, South Shore and Atlantic road is preparing to extend its line from Duluth to Thief River Falls, to connect there with the Soo. Two surveys were made some time ago. The proposed extension would give the Canadian Pacific, with its recently acquired Wisconsin Central line from Chicago to Duluth, an almost air line from Chicago to Winnipeg.

NEWS NOTES.

New Ulm.—Louis Pierckhof of Owatonna, a fireman of a west bound special freight train on the Northwestern railway, was run over by the engine he was firing, which severed his right leg at the hip.

Minneapolis.—Those who have read the novel, "Graustark," by George Barr McCutcheon, will be gratified to learn that opportunity will be afforded of witnessing same in dramatic form, at the Bijou Opera House, Minneapolis, the week of January 24th.

Minneapolis.—Following a diligent two days' search, Andreas Gombose, alias Frank McGee, the murderer of August Bayer, who was shot to death Tuesday night, was arrested Wednesday. The murderer confessed his crime to the police, saying that he intended to kill and rob Bayer. Gombose was arrested as he applied at the Jensen house in search of work, and walked voluntarily into the police trap laid for him.

Brainerd.—A meeting of the stockholders of the Security State bank was held and at the close D. D. Divine, state bank examiner, stated that the meeting adjourned to meet Feb. 17, by which time the assessments on the capital stock would be paid and the bank would reorganize and reopen. George Storck, of Earlham, Iowa, father of the cashier, was present and personally pledged himself to see that every dollar of the assessments is paid.

Glenwood.—George Sherrer died suddenly. He partook of a hearty supper and was apparently in the best of health. He was married to Mrs. Antonie Bernath about the middle of November.

Duluth.—Ole Trulson, a laborer, 58 years old, and employed by John Runquist, contractor, met a horrible death on the Duluth, Missabe & Northern tracks, when he was run over by one of the D., M. & N. switch engines.

Brainerd.—A jury in the district court found Ralph Morey not guilty of the killing of John Bushway

MIX FOR RHEUMATISM

The following is a never failing remedy for rheumatism, and if followed up it will effect a complete cure of the very worst cases: "Mix one-half pint of good whiskey with one ounce of Toris Compound and add one ounce Syrup Sarsaparilla Compound. Take in tablespoonful doses before each meal and at bedtime." The ingredients can be procured at any drug store and easily mixed at home.

Used Dolls to Set Fashions.

Long before women's newspapers were started, and fashion plates in their modern form were thought of, women derived their knowledge of the fashions from dolls dressed in modern costumes, which were sent from one country to another, more especially from Paris, which then, as now, was the leading center of the mode.

MORE PINKHAM CURES

Added to the Long List due to This Famous Remedy.

Camden, N.J.—"It is with pleasure that I add my testimonial to your already long list—hoping that it may induce others to avail themselves of this valuable medicine, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I suffered from terrible headaches, pain in my back and right side, was tired and nervous, and so weak I could hardly stand. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound restored me to health and made me feel like a new person, and it shall always have my praise."—MRS. W. P. VALENTINE, 902 Lincoln Avenue, Camden, N. J.

Gardiner, Me.—"I was a great sufferer from a female disease. The doctor said I would have to go to the hospital for an operation, but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound completely cured me in three months."—MRS. S. A. WILLIAMS, R. F. D. No. 14, Box 39, Gardiner, Me.

Because your case is a difficult one, doctors having done you no good, do not continue to suffer without giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. It surely has cured many cases of female ills, such as inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, indigestion, dizziness, and nervous prostration. It costs but a trifle to try it, and the result is worth millions to many suffering women.

45 to 50 Bu. of Wheat Per Acre have been grown on farm lands in WESTERN CANADA

WESTERN
FREE

Much less would be satisfactory. The general average is above twenty bushels.

"All are loud in their praises of the great crops and that wonderful country."—Extract from correspondence National Editorial Association of August, 1908.

It is now possible to secure a homestead of 160 acres free and another 160 acres at $3.00 per acre. Hundreds have paid the cost of their farms (if purchased) and then had a balance of from $10.00 to $12.00 per acre from one crop. Wheat, barley, oats, flax—all do well. Mixed farming is a great success and dairying is highly profitable. Excellent climate, splendid schools and churches, railways bring most every district within easy reach of market. Railway and land companies have lands for sale at low prices and on easy terms.

"Last Best West" pamphlets and maps sent free. For these and information as to how to secure lowest railway rates, apply to Superintendent of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or the authorized Canadian Government Agent:
